SNOWING IN SEPTEMBER...

Taking a break from the action, Alyssa Hodnick (12) and Natalie Beaufort (12) show spirit in the student section. "My favorite thing about this game was getting to mess with baby powder; it was all through my hair," Beaufort said. The football team went on to upset Connellsville in a 43-14 win.

Changes spark new lessons

If you asked any student or teacher on campus what changed for the 2016-2017 school year, he or she would likely laugh and say that he could more easily list what remained the same. Students adapted to sitting in front of a Chromebook screen during 80 minute periods in the new block schedule. Teachers instructed for twice as long as before while navigating their virtual Google Classrooms and attending endless team meetings. The list of honors and AP classes grew to no end as the list of clubs diminished. Mediated by a mass-shared spreadsheet, our now afternoon Cav Time kept students occupied by expanding the face to face time spent with teachers. Seniors managed to escape the Cav Time chaos now that they had the opportunity to leave early.

Evidence of change made itself known around every corner of the building, but important aspects remained the same. Student artists plastered the walls of the history department with murals as they brought to life wars of the past and exemplified the talent present. The academically inclined built robots in engineering club, and our future business leaders made it to Harrisburg. Athletes boasted brotherly pride as the wrestlers finished with an undefeated season and in third place across the entire state. Vocalists carried on the tradition set by those before them as they placed at district events and worked tirelessly to prepare for The Little Mermaid.

At first glance, everything appeared to have changed. But, one thing remained. Each individual that proudly denoted him or herself as a Cavalier made the promise to...

KA All Day

Story by: A. Koontz (11)

Student section leaders command school spirit

The chants from the ever-growing student section boomed in the ears of the football players as they thundered through the banner on Davis Field.

Chants of "KA-All-Day" and "I Believe That We Will Win" echoed in the ears of spectators, reminding them of the resonating Cavalier pride.

Logan Pollick (11), one of the student section leaders, said, "The most memorable game was when we stood outside in the pouring rain, and the football team beat Franklin Regional. We went all out for white-out night and it was probably one of the most hype themes." The ceremonial baton passing from one year's student section leaders to the next held great weight in the eyes of those that had the duty bestowed upon them.

"The student section is a big Kiski tradition. Every year, everyone looks forward to going and standing in the student section. If you don't stand there, something is wrong with your Friday night. There is nothing better than going and being a part of that," Joey Blumer (12) said.

Having felt the same way, Pollick said, "The student section has been going on for years now. Every year we try to match and go past the intensity of the previous year."

Cavalier Cookouts concluded, the lights above the field dimmed, and the games ended. Still, the spirit of the students lived on long after the seconds ticked down on the clock.

OUR Town

Pantomiming tests young actors

Our Town's production relied heavily on sheer acting ability rather than fast-paced stunts like last year's action-packed She Kills Monsters. The cast of the play utilized pantomiming to make the show just as good without as many props, and it also symbolized the main message of the play.

"Well, pantomime was used in the show to symbolize that material goods aren't what's remembered in life; it's the people and the moments," Rebecca Minda (11) said.

"By not using props, the viewers saw how irrelevant material goods are to life and how they can cloud people's minds. My character realized in the last act that life goes very quickly and how the most important part of life is the memories and the moments," Minda said.

Our Town told the story of the small municipality of Grover's Corners, more specifically the Webb and Gibbs families. The script instructed that actors perform with minimal props and no set, which proved to become quite a challenge.

"Pantomiming was difficult because the actors really had to know what to do to appear convincing. It would have been a lot easier to use props, but the message it sends made it worth it," Jacob Myers (11) said.

Actors had to memorize not only lines and expressions, but also actions, and execute them accurately enough that the audience could easily tell what emotions they intended. The scenes followed the Webbs and Gibbs through daily life without much more than an archway and a few ladders. From the mothers that made breakfast before the kids headed off to school, to even a wedding, a whole lot happened without excessive physical objects, relying on the actors to memorize and execute the moves, almost like a choreographed dance.

Staying true to Thornton Wilder's idea of pantomime while still delivering feeling to the audience, cast and crew members delivered performances that expanded their talents.

BREAK A LEG...

Since Our Town requires no props, Katie Gress (12) mimes cooking bacon. Gress said, "I play the mother of George and Rebecca Gibbs played by Caleb Dull (12) and Shelby Glentzer (10). I relate to Mrs. Gibbs because she is witty and compassionate." Gress was Vera in last year's show, She Kills Monsters.

UNDER THE SPOTLIGHT...

Under the bright spotlight, Julie Shannon (12) begins one of her many monologues in the show. Shannon said, "I freaked out at first when I saw all the lines I needed to memorize, but with a little help from our stage manager, Holly Linder (12), I was able to learn them." Shannon portrayed the Stage Manager, and she narrated the play to the audience.

DRESSING ROOM...

Before the curtain opens, Gwenth Butler (11) styles Rebecca Minda's (11) hair in the mirror room. Butler said, "I was curling her hair to look like she was 14 years old. We had to make her look a different age for every act." Butler played Howard Newsome and Joe Stoddard in the fall play.

WEDDING BELLS...

In the midst of the wedding scene, Caleb Dull (12) looks lovingly into Rebecca Minda's eyes. Dull said, "My character was the love interest of Rebecca Minda's character." Dull performed in the fall drama for the past three years.

MAN UP...
Before the show, Erin Andrews (12) curls her hair into ringlets to make it easier to pin into a hat. Andrews said, "My character was Simon Stimson, the town drunk. It was so difficult to play a male role, but practice made perfect!" Andrews participated in the fall drama for the past four years.

With years of experience, Paige Lane (11) wraps senior Korey Shoupe's (12) knee before baseball practice. "One thing that is kind of behind the scenes about training is that a lot of people get their knees, ankles, and wrists wrapped before practice or a game even starts," Lane said. Lane will become the head trainer for next year.

Music enthusiast describes the feeling of meeting favorite artist

Story by K. George (11)

Music undeniably and indiscriminately shaped teenagers everywhere. The experience of watching artists you admire perform albums that played in the background of homework nights and in the car surrounded by friends cemented themselves as unforgettable memories. The concert culture so many students now actively participated in shaped them as people, especially when they found themselves with the opportunity to meet the people they looked up to.

Self-proclaimed concert enthusiast Olivia Rimmel (11) said, "VIP experiences are always quite nerve racking, honestly. You most likely have just one chance to tell whomever you're meeting how much they mean to you and what they have done for you, etc. Despite the nerves though, they are one of the most fulfilling experiences someone can ever have, in my opinion. You feel complete when you are standing right beside someone who you look up to."

Venues filled with confetti after the finale of set list made ordinary moments in time absolute bliss for those who found solace in live music.

"People always ask me if I could pick a favorite concert, and I feel like my answer is never the same. There are so many moments that I've gathered up from all of the gigs I've been to, and they all mean so much to me. Live music is a big part of my life, and I use every second of a show to make memories that will last a lifetime. But, I must say one time Hoodie Allen serenaded me to my favorite song and told me that he TRUSTED ME before doing so, and my life was kinda changed after that," Rimmel said.

DROP THE MIC...

In the fall performance for Our Town, Rebecca Newton (11) handles the microphones for the show. "Everything can be ruined if you miss one single cue, so it can be stressful. However, seeing the show work flawlessly makes it worth all the hard work," Newton said. Newton served as a stagehand in last year's musical, 42nd Street.

Senior achieves major goals

Intelligent, athletic, and hardworking students existed in large numbers in the halls. Still, certain students went above and beyond in all aspects of their high school career.

The local news station KDKA recognized senior Nicholas Bisceglia for having done just that. His achievements spread over multiple sports, allowing room for a favorite to take place.

"Soccer is probably my favorite sport because it is the first sport I really began playing, and it has always been my favorite. It does take the most time though because I have to travel the most for it," Bisceglia said. His activities reached beyond his own sports.

"I help out with programs in both soccer and basketball," Bisceglia said. Well aware of the underclassmen that potentially looked up to him as he juggled his mile long resume, he offered advice.

Bisceglia said, "Everything has really taught me time management skills and how to deal with stress. Just take a second and review your situation. The biggest thing ever is to just be relaxed."

Whether in the classroom, on the football field, on the soccer field, or anywhere else, at least one student showed his ability to go above and beyond.

Dance show challenges cast

Story by: A. Koontz (11)

The lights rose above 42nd Street for the final time as the auditorium roared with applause for the entire cast. Their tap shoes stepped in perfect time for every number of one of the most difficult shows for a high school put on, but what the audience did not know was just how many hours went into the four performances.

Jenna Schindler (11) said, "When Mr. Capanna first said just how much dancing there was going to be in the show I was definitely scared, but I knew I was going to try my best. Especially considering I had never taken formal dance classes ever before."

Teaching those who never danced before to tap dance almost was as big a feat as learning the never ending choreography.

Dance Captain Julie Shannon (12) said, "It was definitely more challenging than I thought it would be to teach inexperienced tappers. Breaking into small groups and really taking the time to master every individual step was very beneficial. Everyone was very dedicated and worked really hard."

No matter the amount of skinned knees and bruised legs it took to put on a show that relied so heavily on movement, the cast anxiously hoped for another dance filled show.

"I'm really hoping for another dance filled show, it was so much fun and the audience seemed to love it," Schindler said.

SING THE NIGHT AWAY...

Alone on stage, Tanner Knapp sings a solo. "If I was having a bad day, I could always count on Tanner to cheer me up," fellow cast member Bailey Ziencik (11) said. Tanner had since graduated but still continued his love of music.

DANCING SHOES, HATS, AND SUITS...

In one of his main dance numbers, Noah Woodward (11) gets all the steps right. "For this song, 'Dame', we had to do a full costume change into tuxes which was really hard to pull off," Noah said. Noah has been a member of multiple choirs and has been singing since he can remember.

JUST SMILE AND DANCE...
During a unison dance number, the feature dancers tap dance for the audience. "I made a lot of new friends by helping them learn the dance," Olivia Shirley (11) said. To perfect her dancing skills, Shirley took dance at Albright Dance Stars with Kristina Albright in Monroeville, PA for 14 years.

EDITOR'S BLOG...

Even though it may be hard to see at first, if you look closely, you will realize that the two girls in the picture are the same person. Often times, people perceive themselves differently than those around them. Many people, especially my age, experience some sort of confidence issues, and I believe that goes unrecognized. So, I wanted to take that idea and turn it into a photo to further show how one may view himself negatively. Many of these views stem from comparing oneself to others on social media. So, this picture describes how one changes to achieve that society-worthy look.

Not all that into social media, Taylor Craven (12) displays her general Facebook profile picture. "I mostly use it to view others' profiles and pictures I'm tagged in," Craven said. She also chose general icons for all of her other accounts.

Students explore online selves versus reality

Instagram. Twitter. Facebook. Tumblr. Snapchat. The world of social media extended its reach across the Internet and teenagers alike. Whether tagging Davis Field as your location on a Friday night or swiping the high school's geofilter onto the screen of a snap, social media's presence proved undeniable.

On the contrary, the topics retweeted and images posted on Instagram varied exponentially.

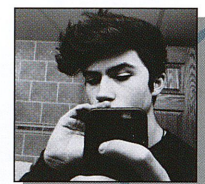

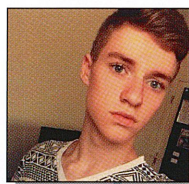

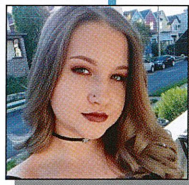

Kylie George (11) said, "I find that I talk the most about whatever I'm interested in at the moment. Although, my Instagram isn't really a place for myself anymore. I mainly use it to talk to my Internet friends that don't live around here."

Proving different people used the same platforms for extremely different things, Brad Nagy (12) said, "Baseball. Baseball. Baseball. And I do talk about some other sports, too. Sometimes, I'll go into politics or social issues happening at the time, and even news going on around the world." Even the effect of social media in real life ranged greatly between users.

"I try to be a positive person all the time, but I'm definitely more conscious of it on social media. I might complain around my friends or tell them the small, random things about my day, but I have more time to process what I'm saying online before I hit post," George said. From a different perspective, Nagy said,

"I tend to talk about a lot of what I do on social media. Most of my friends and my family enjoy the same thing as me so I tend to talk and tweet the same stuff. I believe a lot of people try to portray themselves as different online than they actually are in real life, though."

QUEEN FOR a Night

Nominees root for each other's victories

Story by: T. Craven (12)

With the harsh fluorescence of stadium lights bearing down on them, nominees for the 2016 homecoming queen stood at the fifty yard line of Davis Field, minds racing in anticipation. In mere seconds, or what felt like hours for contenders, the loudspeaker announced the winner, and one of six senior girls claimed the much sought after crown.

"I was in shock", said Kylie Schafer (12). "I never expected to win. Anyone would have been an amazing choice, and I was grateful when my name was called. I was so taken aback that I couldn't even hold a smile. I didn't know what to think."

Schafer seemed alone in her disbelief though. Fellow court members asserted that she most deserved the title. Madelyn Pollick (12) said, "I thought Kylie was a great choice. Her personality is out of this world and she's so genuinely kind-hearted. It was impossible not to be happy for her."

Jamie Frank (12) supported Pollick's opinion and said, "She is one of the sweetest girls you'll ever meet. I was excited when I knew it was her."

In weeks after the court announcement, no pettiness ensued. The girls showed nothing but support for one another leading up to the fateful night. Pollick said, "I felt that everyone on the court was more than worthy of being considered. We were all friends prior, but after spending so much time preparing, we become closer. I was more excited than ever to show my love for everyone throughout the whole process."

Twins describe pros/cons of sharing everything

Twins seemed to come a dime a dozen in the school; many sets of two attend the district. But the real question is how did they view each other? Can those with shared DNA remain friends? Did they look alike? Marissa Ray (11) explained that she and her twin Katie got along on some occasions, but not always.

"Sometimes we're friends," she said with a chuckle, "and sometimes we aren't. It's just like any other sibling, but, like, ten times worse." Ray also said that she and Katie used to look alike, but not so much anymore.

"We've definitely grown apart in looks as we got older. But it's still really easy to tell that were twins," Ray said.

On the other hand, Gabriella Jordan-Spieering (11) claimed that she and her twin, Isabella, look "quite similar" now.

Jordan-Spieering said, "We looked pretty similar when we were younger, but were more distinguishable now. People have an easier time telling us apart."

Jordan-Spieering, totally straight faced, said, "We rarely get along. It can be really frustrating."

Those grouped with another person throughout their entire life can attest it got old quickly, standing out became a challenge. Although most siblings didn't exactly worship each other, to see how much you parallel another person and still not coexist peacefully proved surprisingly possible. It showed that as similar as two people seemed, truly no two lived the same life.

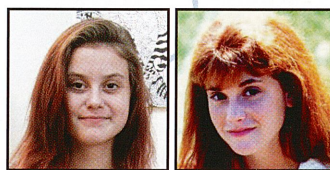

BEST FRIENDS FOR LIFE...

Surprisingly, many twins love having a copy of themselves around. "Having a twin is like having your best friend with you all the time," Ana Cook (12) said. Unlike many sisters, Ana Cook (12) and Adeline Cook (12) rarely fought over their clothes.

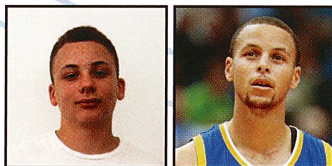

FOLLOW MY LEAD...

Quick to take inspiration from one another, Isabella and Gabriella Jordan-Spieering (11) frequently fight over clothing. "There is a love/hate relationship when you love the same things and it makes it hard to find your own identity," Spieering said. The pair both performed in the fall play.

Student political involvement peaks as Election Day approaches

The Election Day of 2016 marked the culmination of a presidential race labeled as one of the most controversial to date. On November 8, citizens of a divided nation flocked to polling places, burdened by the undeniable fact that every vote counted. Paralyzed with indecision, they cast their ballot for whomever they thought most worthy of the presidency - Donald Trump, a businessman whose unrefined rhetoric shockingly carried him past the primaries, or Hillary Clinton, current Secretary of State and first female ever listed on the final ballot.

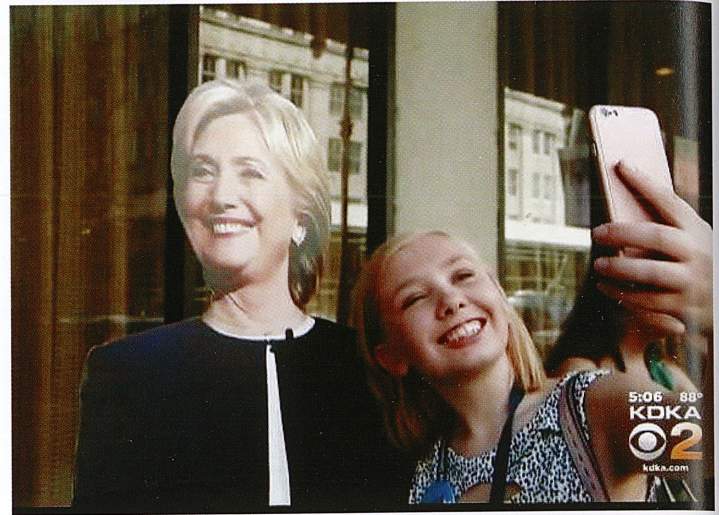

Regardless of which candidate assumed the title of President-Elect, the results of the election would nonetheless have made history. Maggie Mullooly (11) said. "I went to the polls to watch my mom vote for the first female president, and we stayed up until 2:30 in the morning to watch the returns together. It was an emotional experience for the both of us. I wanted to be with her when the results came in, but I fell asleep right before they called Michigan and Wisconsin. My heart sank when I saw that a Trump victory had been announced that morning. I didn't know what it would mean for the future of the country."

"I've been interested in politics since the 2012 election, and I'm a member of several organizations, including GirlGov. The group has provided me with so many opportunities to get involved in government. I've lobbied for bills and even had the chance to attend the Democratic National Convention this past year. I watched Hillary formally accept the nomination, and I cried like a baby. I was so invested in her campaign, and I was devastated," Mullooly said.

Amid heightened violence across the nation, Mullooly hoped for peace.

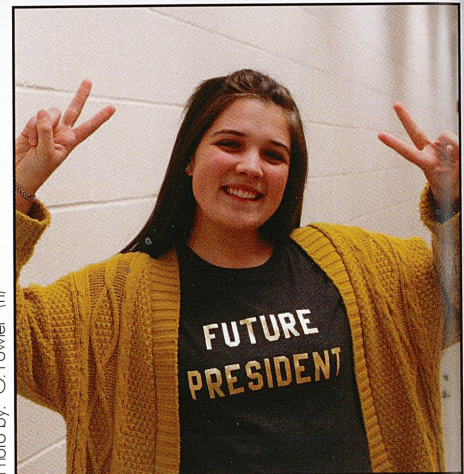

"We can't let this divide us. I refuse to root against a country that I love, and I only want us to grow over the next four years. We have been set back, but something great will come from it eventually. I've received great backlash from my classmates, but I know a woman is capable of being a great leader. Maybe I'll have a hand in making that happen in the future," Mullooly said.

Smiling wide, Julie Shannon (12) shows her love for politics. "I think the people that say they're moving to Canada are just making excuses, and that's ridiculous. WAR

Classes go head to head in week-long battle for bragging rights

Battle of the Classes; a week-long event starring a select few students from the freshman, sophomore, junior, and senior classes. Every day, the classes faced off in different competitions live-broadcasted for the whole school to watch and cheer along. Ultimately, the seniors took the victory after the final showdown, taking the title alongside shouts and congratulations. Brittany Palla (12) almost single-handedly masterminded and organized the event.

"I came up with the idea several months ago, and then about a month ago, I started going into more in depth details about it," Palla said. "I did a lot of research on fun activities that could work for the entire week. I wanted to pick games that were fun and would get everyone's attention, but not take away from the super-active assembly we had on Friday. Spreading the word was sort of difficult because even the people involved in the games were super-confused about what to do. When the actual day came, I was excited and nervous because I was concerned everyone was going to think it was dumb and that no one would watch it. But, I think the games were a success."

As much as Palla exuded excitement and pride in all the hard work, she also seemed hopeful. Her request to the students? To continue the legacy.

"I think it would be really cool if in years to come, they are still doing the class wars week. I really had a lot of fun planning and organizing it, and I would love for future classes to experience that," Palla said.

Smiling but determined, Maddy Pollick (12) helps the seniors take the win for tug-of-war. "I love participating in Battle of the Classes because so many of my friends do it," Pollick said. Pollick had participated in Battle of the Classes since she was a sophomore.

Laughing uncontrollably, Mallory Shick (11) participates in the wheelbarrow race with Logan Pollick (11). "My favorite part of the assembly was when we pulled Gendyah onto the floor with us to dance," Shick said. Shick had competed in Battle of the Classes for two consecutive years.

FACE OFF...
Showing no fear, Peyton McCann (9) faces off against senior Chase Kuhn (12). "The event that I had the most fun in was definitely tug-of-war," McCann said. This was McCann's first year competing in Battle of the Classes.

CITY of Bridges

Story by: A. Chickerella (11)

Students boast about field trips to Pittsburgh

With high school years clocking in at some of the most stressful times of the teens lives, field trips came in handy for the preservation of many students sanity levels. Since Pittsburgh held such a positive reputation, many clubs utilized the allure of the city and traveled downtown for a day.

William Walker (11) said, "The Spanish Club field trip was definitely the best experience of my year so far. Mrs. U. did a great job of hyping it up so that everyone wanted to go. Before the trip, we did a really awesome shirt sale, and the highest seller got money to buy themselves lunch on the trip. We did a lot in the city. We got front row seats to a show, we went shopping, we petted animals at Petco, and we had the most amazing lunch at Burgatory; literally everyone posted it on their Snapchat stories." Another student participated in the field trip for two years in a row.

Emily Cieslinski (12) said, "I am in AP Spanish V now so I have been learning about the Spanish culture for a long time. The fifth year kids were in charge of designing the shirts for the shirt sale that helped raise the money for the trip. We got to see an amazing show, then we had freedom to sightsee, shop, and eat at the amazing places the city had to offer."

Aside from Spanish, members of yearbook staff also took a trip into the Burgh.

"We have recently started going down to the city to attend a workshop and competition at Point Park University for yearbook and publication skills. It was a great trip, even though we had to be at the school at 6:30 in the morning," Elizabeth Debich (12) said.

On one of the first brisk winter days in Pittsburgh, five staffers and I traveled to Point Park University for the fall PSPA Regional Contests. Our adviser, Hallie, and I ventured off campus during an afternoon session to take pictures of the city. Mrs. Lynch (adviser) kept watch as Hallie lied in the middle of an empty street on her back, attempting to get the right angle to accurately capture the architecture of the iconic buildings. The many signs around also intrigued us.

Students embrace most cringe-worthy moments.

At one time or another, we've all had the iron fist of humiliation come down on us so hard that we figured skipping town just might remain our only hope of salvaging any part of our reputation. The fist loosened its grip to no ones will, exempting none from its wrath. It patiently lied in wait, eager to claim its next victim. Some encounters left lifelong scars. It could take months, years even, for flashbacks to abate. Fortunately, a select few students had the opportunity to dredge up all of those cringe-worthy moments.

Erin Andrews (12) recalled an incident that seemed difficult to live down among Fall Drama members.

"One time at rehearsal for She Kills Monsters, the stage was unavailable for us to use so we practiced right in front of the stage. In one scene, I had to do a cartwheel over a box. Midway through it, my foot caught on the edge of the stage, and I smacked my face off of it. I thought it best to just stay down for a bit, and then I felt the tears well up in my eyes," Andrews said.

Some looked back at awkward moments with humor rather than shame.

Emily Cieslinski (12) said, "I started off my freshman year playing soccer, so I had never known where to find my bus. I wandered around the parking lot forever trying to find it. When I did, it was a relief until I realized it was the wrong one. When I first got on the bus, I even argued with a few people who told me I was wrong, but I just sat down. I had to wait until everyone else was dropped off, despite living right across from the school."

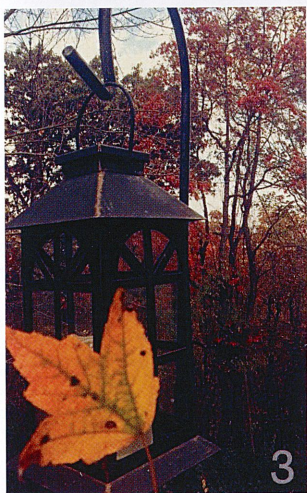

Robert Vermeulen (12) said, "One time in middle school a kid challenged me to a fight, and I cried. I don't think that's the worst I can come up with. I'd have to think on a few others, but this one seems the least awkward."

PICTURE This

Story by: A. Chickerella (11)

Student photographers/videographers display talents

Self-expression defined students throughout their entire lives; however, in high school, they finally found an outlet to show their true colors through photography. Photography knew no social standards, no norms, and, most importantly, no boundaries. Student film artists showed their true talents through their passion for looking through the lens.

Jacob Hanzlik (11) said, "I've definitely always been a nerd. I have stayed secluded and been pretty shy as long as I can remember. My passions have always ranged from video games, to film, to computers, to music. I found a true love for video games which brought me to my love of computers. Then, I decided to combine the two."

Hanzlik created a YouTube channel a year ago in which he posted videos about his video gaming skills weekly or biweekly, and he has gained 34 subscribers. Hanzlik plays games like "Dark Souls," "Human Fall Flat," and "Subnautica." Hanzlik goes by "Vortex" in the YouTube world.

Another student combined his love for humor, photography, editing, and videos.

Tret McElfresh (11) said, "I have a YouTube and an Instagram that are my primary sources of posting. I used to make Vines, but Vine is shutting down. I like to take my own pictures and videos that I also edit myself. I have a GoPro that I use sometimes. I make memes primarily. I consider myself pretty funny, and my Instagram posts seem to get a lot of love."

"I started out in 7th grade whenever I got social media because all the images I saw were like role models for me. I have taken pictures with a Sony DSC-H300 and with a Nikon Coolpix," Amber Aikins (10) said.

Aikins created her account because she took photos of her horses; however, whenever a popular account she created gained thousands of photographers, she decided to expand her horizons and take photos of anything she pleased.

Aikins said, "I take pictures of anything that looks cool. I do take some specifically to fit the theme of my Instagram accounts, but I also do it because I love to travel and take pictures of the amazing things I find."

MONEY

Talks

Story by: A. Chickerella (11)

Seniors prepare to invest in their futures

Money. Money. Money. Senior year threw many unexpected costs in the faces of the class of 2017.

Parking passes alone cost 50 dollars. Gas, maintenance, and most vitally, a car, cost thousands. Students applied to many colleges, and each application cost near 50 dollars.

Hannah Patterson (12) said, "It kind of goes both ways. For example my IUP application was 29 dollars. But, my clarion application was free because I took it while I was there on a visit."

Additional charges appeared for Casey Sharek (12). Sharek said, "I tried to avoid colleges with application fees since some of the ones I looked at cost 40 to 50 dollars. I also found out that for the College Board to send your scores to the schools you apply to, it costs an additional ten dollars. I realized how much application costs are going to add up because I am planning on applying to a decent chunk of schools because I really want to increase my chances of getting into an amazing school of my dreams."

Numerous seniors obtained jobs to finance their costly extracurriculars and future plans. Sharek (12), said "I save my money for the schools that I apply to that won't have fee waivers because they're going to cost me a fortune."

"Since I know now that college is going to be expensive, I take a decent chunk of my paycheck and put it into savings. I work a lot so I am able to save quite a bit of my paycheck, and it makes me and my parents feel better about my future, knowing I am beginning to save for my future already," Patterson said.

"I applied to two colleges. One of them I used a fee waiver, but the other cost me 55 dollars. I am going to apply to more schools than that, and I know I have to save up a lot more money for all the fees. Since I drive, I have to use my money from work for gas, as well. I have to drive my siblings around so I use a decent amount of gas. I fill up my tank sporadically, but that's about thirty dollars every other week," Jonathan Scofield (12) said.

Remember When?

Story by: K. George (11)

Students revisit past memories

Every student could recount a memory with friends from school that they never forgot, whether scary, shocking, or funny. Julie Shannon (12) recalled a day from her sophomore year.

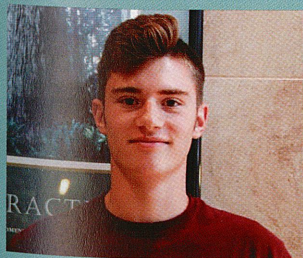

"One day in ninth grade, I was walking around the 400 building before homeroom began with Ariel Kline - (12) and Jack Pellegrini (12). The three of us were the only people in the hallway, well, besides two boys walking in front of us. Suddenly, we saw one of the boys push the other, sending him flying into the water fountain attached to the wall. We watched in awe as the kid's body tore the water fountain off the wall," she said, still amused by the event.

"Until the fountain was replaced, the three of us reflected on the hilarious memory every day as we passed the garbage bag and duct tape replacing it. We still walk around the 400 building every morning to this day!"

Now, not everyone witnessed the destruction of school property, but these moments ran rampant in the minds of all. The memories that remain in your head are significant and insignificant alike. A throwback doesn't have to look pretty with all clean edges and a glossy coat. It could take the form of something a little wilder and crazier, something that made your stomach hurt from laughing at even the thought of it. Everyone deserves a throwback that made it all worth it.

Seniors predict what comes next

What are your plans after high school? The question that sends students running.

While the concept of life in the real world frightened a lot of people, quite a few students stood out and cherished the future that waited for them. Some students already picked a college and major, some even a profession.

"I'm really looking forward to going to college," Madison Lizik (12) said with a smile.

"I'm attending IUP for nursing. It feels really scary sometimes, but I'm confident that everything will go well."

Lizi Ellenberger (12) brightened at the mention of the distant horizon.

"I want to go to school for law! But, I also want to go to the Air National Guard and be in the military part time. My long term goal, though, is to own my own law firm. Everything else is just a precursor to that main plan. I'm really excited to go into the world. Can you tell?" Ellenberger said.

On the other hand, Nicholas Hurley (12) looked apprehensive as he answered.

"After high school? College. Is that too broad? I don't really have a plan yet. Maybe something with hockey," Hurley said.

The slight look of terror on his face begged not to ask further. But, one thing is for sure: whether they don't know anything about their tomorrows or they have every step of the way planned, the path looked bright for the graduating seniors.

END OF an Era

Story by: T. Craven (12)

Final millennial class moves forward

With each graduating class, more and more students born after the new millennium have flooded the hallways, leaving the last of those originating from the 20th century as the minority.

To some, a few years difference did not seem so significant while others observed their childhoods differed entirely, unlike those of upcoming generations.

Two students looked back with nostalgia at their upbringings, reminiscing of the days when their biggest fears consisted of forgetting to press record on the VCR as "The Lizzie McGuire Movie" premiered on the Disney Channel.

"Kids today are missing out on the wicked, awesome TV shows that we had growing up," Julie Shannon (12) said.

Emily Cieslinski (12) agreed, saying that "Drake and Josh" topped her list of favorites. Other top picks included "Rugrats," "The Amanda Show," "That's So Raven," and "Even Steven."

"I miss everything from these shows to our old toys," Cieslinski said. "Everyday, I was riding around on Big Wheels with my brother in our garage. I never had to worry about school or sports. I had time to do anything that I felt like, and that's definitely not the case now. I barely have any time to myself."

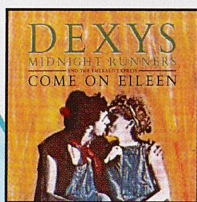

Though the early 2000s provided great strides in technological advancement, the majority of seniors remarked that they seemed less immersed in it as today's children.

"I always tuned in to catch the latest TV episode when I wasn't running wild outside. I think that's what divides us. I wasn't as attached to technology at such a young age," Cieslinski said.

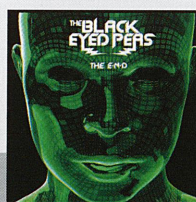

"It's strange that most kids today own a cell phone," Erin Andrews (12) said. "I feel like kids aren't as reliant on imagination as we were, and technology definitely plays a bigger role in our lives now. I miss the time when I could play pretend in my backyard."

Tales of Regret

Story by: A. Chickerella (III)

Seniors reflect on the "what ifs" of high school careers

After high school, life always continued on the same way it did before; however, high school experiences provided every student with life-changing memories and adventures. With all experiences, regret always found its way in.

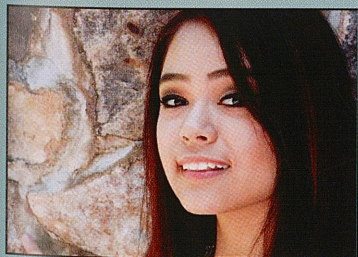

Connor Martin (12) said, "I wish I had dropped Spanish earlier so I could've taken more CADD and technology classes to prepare me for my future. The way it works is that you have to take certain prerequisites before you can take other classes so I wasn't able to take everything I wanted."

Procrastinating proved itself a defining regret in many senior's school time. Tom Starr (12), said, "Procrastinating was my biggest flaw, my biggest regret. It was like all my other regrets stemmed from the procrastinating. Waiting to do loads of AP homework seems like a good idea until you're doing it. The only thing I didn't procrastinate was joining band early, and that turned out to be one of the best parts of my high school career."

Clubs, extracurriculars, and electives defined students' experiences in high school. Alex Heinle (12), said, "I regret plenty of things, but they all have the common theme of not getting involved soon enough. I really wish I had taken culinary. I also wanted to try stage crew. Another thing I wish I did was value my time in each grade more, because after all, you only have one of each."

"BEFORE I TURN 18 I WANT TO HELP OTHERS WITH LOVE AND COMPASSION. THE SOUL IS THE SAME IN ALL LIVING CREATURES ALTHOUGH THE PHYSICAL BODY IS NOT. WE ARE ALL A PART OF THE UNIVERSE, WE ARE ONE BEATING HEART OF MANY, OM SHANTI."

Kiya Romanek (12)

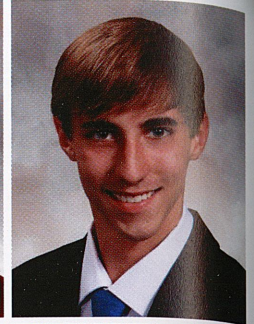

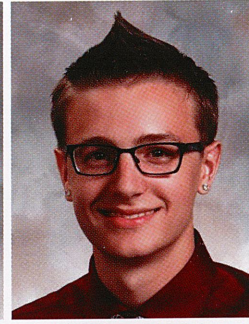

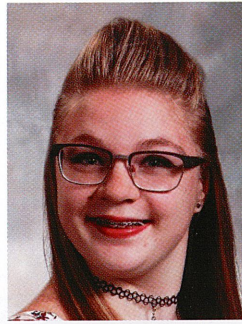

"I regret all the hours of sleep I lost getting up early to do my hair and makeup."

IF YOU COULD GO BACK IN TIME, WHAT ADVICE WOULD YOU GIVE YOUR Freshman Self?

Story by: A. Chickerella (11)

A Legacy that Lasts

How would you want to be remembered?

Football games, pep rallies, state championships, and school spirit showed itself though many forms. In any stereotypical teenage movie, legacy and spirit define a high school's aura. Throughout the years, the senior class maintained a thriving sense of unity, spirit, and passion. Friday night football games served as a hub for a melting pot of social groups who all shared one common denominator: school pride.

Sarah Master (12), said, "As a cheerleader, I got a front row seat to watching the best of the Friday night festivities. We always arrived early and participate in the parades, which unified the town along with the school. It is honestly undeniable how amazing the energy is on Friday nights at home."

Football games proved incredibly unique and wonderful. They involved everyone. The athletes played the game, the parents and community spectated, the marching band performed, the cheerleaders cheered, and everyone else watched from the stands to support the team.

Another student desired to begin another legacy for the school.

Alexander Ferraro (12), said, "Something that's bothered me for a long time is the fact that the hockey team goes unnoticed. We have home and away games and a senior night just like every other sports teams. In the past, our team hasn't been amazing, but we didn't get any recognition. Our team started to get better and better, and occasionally we would have a student section, and those games were always the best."

CONTINUED Improvement

Story by: T. Craven (12)

Juniors reflect upon accomplishments

A one point or another, although we'd never have admitted it, many of us thought much more highly of ourselves than we deserved, inhibiting the self-criticism necessary for self-improvement. Improving upon skill, whether in academics, athletics, or arts, proved necessary for any sort of improvement.

Those who succeeded adopted an ever-changing disposition, one for the better. With only one more year of high school ahead of them, two students reflected on their biggest milestones since crossing the threshold of the atrium freshman year.

"This year, I was honored to be selected for the Westmoreland Elite in volleyball," Sophie McDermott (11) said. "It's pretty prestigious from what I know. We're judged by college coaches. I was really shocked to learn that I was chosen. But, looking back, I've changed a lot in order to become the player that I am now. As an upperclassman, I'm more calm and open-minded. I really see the big picture, and I don't allow small issues to hold me back. When I first started playing, I felt like I was focused more on myself. But now, I really try to have everyone else in mind, too. Recognizing my faults and growing up has led me to success. Things would be different if I still acted like a freshman."

Remaining humble regarding her talents, Hallie Zidek (11) said, "I don't know about milestones, but I might have a few footstones. I did win the photography competition at Point Park University when I went with yearbook staff. I'll be going to States at Penn State in March. I guess it is kind of a big deal because in freshman year my pictures weren't all that great. I owe a lot to Mr. Fantaski. He was my mentor. He's had a huge hand in developing the skill that I have now. The quality of my pictures has improved more than I realize sometimes. I guess thinking about who I used to be as a photographer is surprising."

Test Me Juniors dish on feelings about SATs

In addition to the terrible stress over standardized tests, eleventh graders drowned in numerous other questions regarding the SATs.

Students stressed out from the awful moment the SAT packet hit their desk, and the headache emerged after proctors collected the test. Enter some advice from experienced test takers... get used to it. A better way to test the brain emerged while also pushing it to its limits.

"I took an SAT prep class for a few weeks leading up to the test day," Tret Mcelfresh (11) said. "It was an educational experience that aided my performance on the SATs. Without that class, I would for sure not have done as well as I did. The time constraint was what was the most stressful, but I did really well by always being prepared from the course I took. It relieved a lot of that stress."

At the same time, others disagreed. At least one junior who took the SATs for the first time found the same stress while taking the exam.

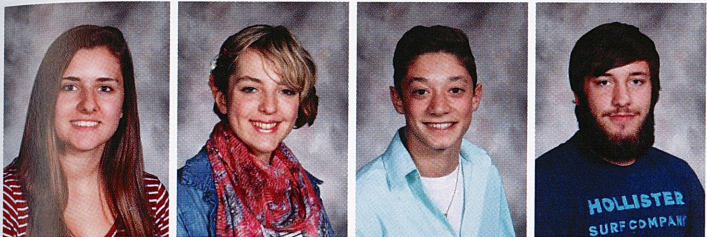

"There is so much pressure to do well on them because of college," Sarah Heavner (11) said. "I do not think the course helped me as much as it helped others. They are extremely long, and it is hard to try and concentrate for that long."

MAKE A Wish

Story by: T. Craven (12)

Students hope for brighter
times

With your nose shoved deep down into a novel that you should have finished last week, your eyes darted back and forth, scanning line after line of dialogue in search of any quote-worthy essay material because you needed to turn in three pages first thing the next morning.

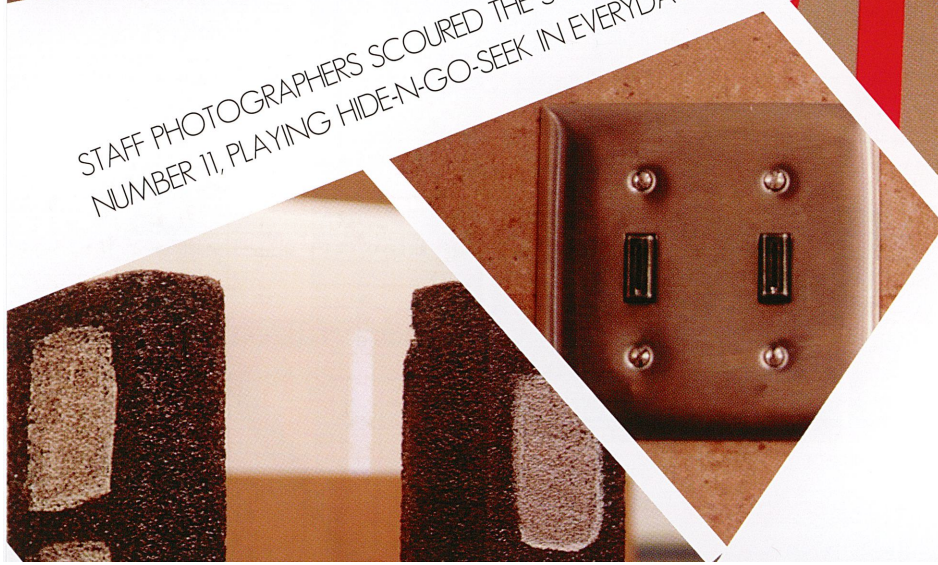

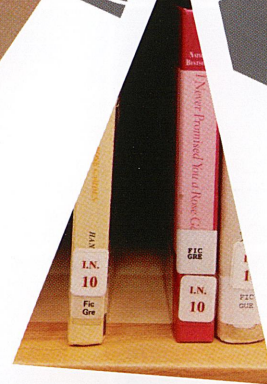

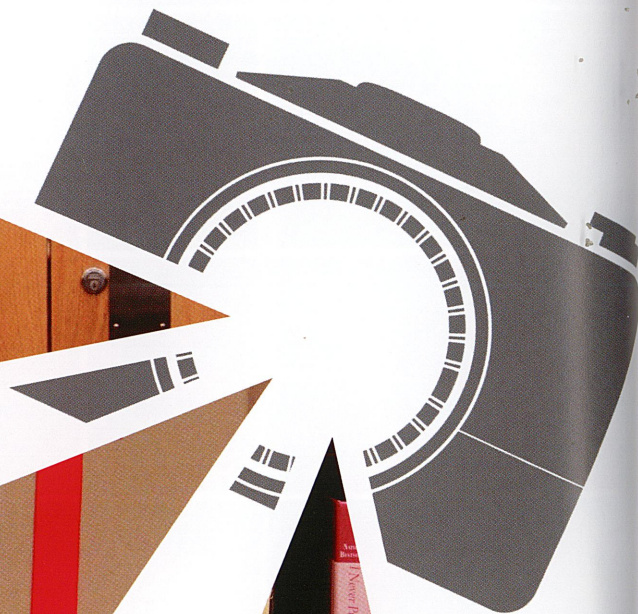

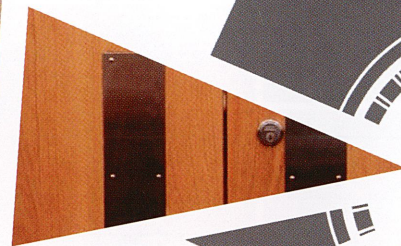

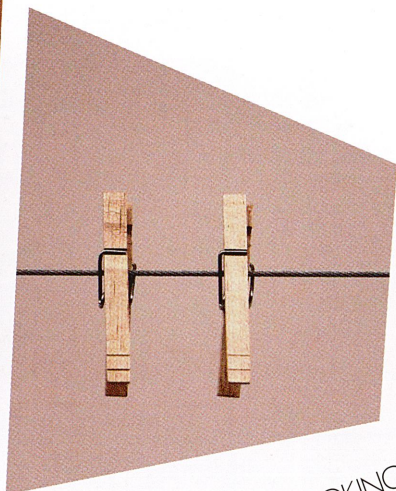

Time ticked on at almost ten times its usual rate, or so it seemed. Already exasperated and very much full of regret, you raised your head from its shameful position and focused your sight on the clock, hoping that you would get at least a few hours of sleep before the sound of the 5 a.m. alarm. The clock reads 11:11, and instinctively you make a wish, asking for a "Just kidding. I don't need your papers tomorrow. Have a nice night," email from your English teacher.

From time to time, we give in to the superstition that during a single minute, anything we wish for most might just come true. As silly as it might seem, those 60 seconds inspired two students to reflect on what mattered most to them.

Olivia Rimmel (11) said, "I know it sounds cheesy, but I wish for world peace. I'm just so tired of the violence that I see every day on the news. It's something I've been more passionate about since the election. I feel like it's at an all-time high."

"I agree that rising intolerance has a lot to do with the recent election," Kai Clayton (11) said. "Something that's really bothered me is the inequality minorities in our country face, especially the gay community. I only wish that we could accept one another for who we are. How can we erase the progress that's been made over the years? Let everyone be happy. Why can't we?"

SMACK IN The Middle

Story by: T. Craven (12)

Sophomores lament about feeling caught between high school identities

With the start of sophomore year comes relief; the pressure to adjust came and went, leaving behind a year of milestones in its wake. Sometimes described as the "middle child" of high school, tenth grade tended to yield no significant memories.

Most students struggled to recall anything worthy of mention, yet seemed confident that the year held great importance - not now, but in the future.

"This year just doesn't really feel all that special to me. The excitement of freshmen year has passed, and there are no perks of being an underclassman. Everything seems to be dragging, and sometimes it's hard to get through the day. I know it's preparing me for what to expect junior year, but I'm really anticipating its end," Madison Hall (10) said.

"I agree that sophomore year is really tough to get through just because it seems so uneventful, but academically, a lot has changed," Hope Albert (10) said.

"The rigor is up from last year, and teachers expect that you've adjusted to high school by now. One thing that I really favor from this year to last is the writing that we do. There's more of it, and I feel like it's helping to prepare me for college. I know I won't struggle with admission essays," Albert said further.

"I do feel like I'm stuck in the middle, but having a senior as a friend helps tremendously," Emily Orris (10) said.

"I appreciate that she has her license, but I can't wait to get mine. I don't only take advantage of that though. I think meeting her has made this year memorable. She's taught me a lot and is always around to lend advice. I really would have missed out if we hadn't been friends. She's made this year a lot of fun. She's the coolest girl in school," Orris said.

"THE WORST THING ABOUT BEING A SOPHOMORE IS THAT I STILL HAVE A LOT OF TIME LEFT. I'M NOT QUITE AN UPPERCLASSMAN, BUT I'M PAST BEING FRESH MEAT."

GOOD LUCK WITH That

Superstitions carried an eerie curse. Nobody in their right mind thought consciously of whether or not the charm kept in their pocket had any real worth. But, if everyone took a moment to think of something they experienced, or even maybe the reason it happened, superstitions acted as a great excuse for why it did. Besides finding an excuse, that one simple item made for an interesting dispute. To step outside the box and look inside, a high school community determined its truth and found superstitions useless.

"I don't have any superstitions but I've been in a few bad situations where I could've used one," Connor Martin (12) said. "During cross country, I would go on long runs with one of my friends who never stopped talking. Needless to say, it got annoying once he decided to sprint the last 200 meters in every run."

Joey Kalik (12) also found an inconsistency in superstitions during a stressful section track meet.

"I was running the 800 meter," Kalik said. "Everything went wrong from the start. Our undefeated season was on the line in that race, and one of our runners sprinted to the front at the beginning. Everyone else followed him, and I went from first to last in a matter of seconds. I used all my energy to get back to the front, and we still had 600 meters to go."

RUNWAY TO Hallway

Story by: A. Koontz (11)

Students grace halls
with fashion choices

Conscious decisions made every morning impacted how each student chose to present themselves to their peers and to the rest of the world. Whether students wardrobes fell into a stereotypical category such as preppy, casual, or athletic changed regularly, the choice remained completely up to them.

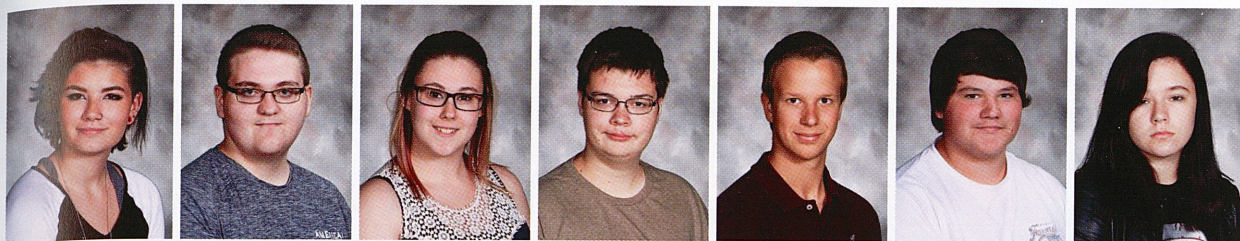

High school did not typically allow for such wide choices left to students, but fashion remained an anomaly.

Shilo Ross (10) said, "My typical school outfit would consist of vans, cool socks, jeans, and t-shirt. Outside of school, I dress a little more in my own style. It would usually be a bomber jacket, some ripped jeans, or a denim skirt, Doc Martens, and a fun top. I prefer to dress like the latter, even though it isn't as comfortable."

Another student, Liz Townsend, (10) said, "I'd describe my style as comfy and cute. I pretty much shop at American Eagle and Charlotte Russe because those are my favorite places to get jeans and scarves. That's what I wear most of the time." Inspiration came from everywhere when attempting to put together a look.

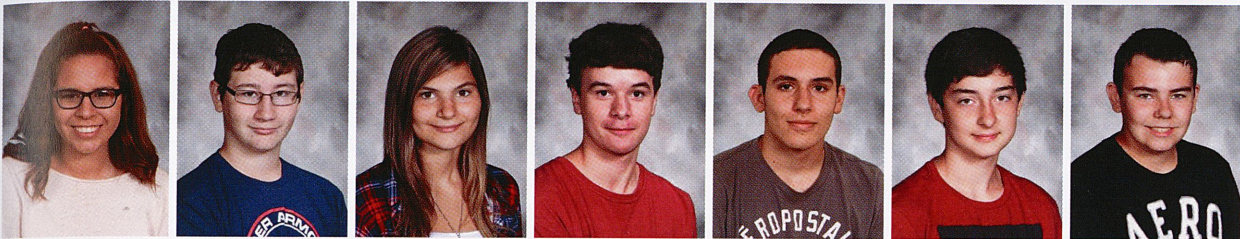

"I'm really inspired by the '70s and '90s. I've also always loved to pull inspiration from Cher from the movie Clueless," Ross said. No matter the day or occasion students left their personal trademark in the hallways through their fashion choices.

BOTTOM OF THE Food Chain

Story by: A. Chickerella (11)

Freshmen experience the realities of high school

Movies, TV, books, and rumors depicted high school in a way that paralyzed many fearing freshmen.

Sure, they thought, these myths came across far from the truth. However, not everything they heard about high school turned out false. Various freshmen shared fears they had with all kinds of high school issues, ranging from athletics to academics.

Justin Hessom (9) said, "Wrestling has always been a big part of my life, and I have been in love with the sport and dedicated to it for as long as I can remember. Middle school wrestling was an amazing experience and challenging, as well. I was insanely excited to move up to the high school to compete because it is such a big deal up there, and they have an amazing group of guys and coaches. I was a little uneasy hearing about how much more serious training was and how much harder the coaches were on the guys. I brushed it off because I had been used to working hard all my life, but there was definitely a huge difference, and I was pushed so much harder than ever before."

Taylor Williams (9) said, "In middle school they always tried to scare us away from the chemicals by showing us and telling us about the chemical showers and eyewash stations, but no one ever really was in danger because we didn't really do any dangerous labs or use any toxic chemicals. I thought that we never would do anything that could actually risk us getting injured, and I thought that the chemical precautions and fire blankets were just in the labs because they had to be, not because they would ever get used. On the first day of school, my science teacher made sure we knew how to use all the safety equipment and told us stories of kids needing to utilize it. I'm still scared."

The current freshmen harbored fear and anxiety about the big scary world of high school, but collectively, most agreed: the experienced already had surpassed middle school.

GOOGLE Everything

Story by: A. Chickerella (11)

Students learn importance of technology

No Internet meant no class. What? Some classes ran completely paper free this year as technology in the classroom turned into a widely accepted technique. Google Chromebooks distributed to every student provided a new approach to innovation.

Emily Duncan (9) said, "The Chromebooks are really cool to have because most of us hadn't already had a laptop of our own. We use them different amounts in every class, but on all sides of it, they're useful. Using Google Classroom, Calendar, and Remind helps me remember things and makes missing school less painful."

John Petrarca (9) said, "The best use for my Chromebook actually happened quite recently. Just last week, at callbacks for musical, Mr. Capanna made a Google Classroom and shared information we needed with us. I know it will also help out when our rehearsal schedules get crazy because that way we can all view the calendar and send emails back and forth," Gabriella Scalise (9) said,

"I really like having my Chromebook around. I especially love using it in band because our directors post our music so we can listen to it and practice. Having a computer that works at all times also helps me when I'm stuck at school for rehearsal, and it keeps me organized. The changing LED light thingy was just the icing on the cake."

FRESH Meat

Story by: K. George (11)

Freshmen lack seniority in the high school

We've all been there. Bottom of the food chain. Fresh meat. Ninth graders.

Every eighth grader soared from the top of the middle school down to the murky depths of the high school, just as its seniors transitioned to college freshmen. This rollercoaster transition challenged a lot of students. However, Celia Chickerella (9) felt as good as ever.

"It doesn't really feel very different to me. I've grown up knowing many of the people not only in my grade, but also the upperclassmen. I've stuck with a lot of my friends from last year, and I think the transition was a lot easier because I had all of them. Also, my sister has been getting me involved in a lot of clubs and activities at the high school so she has helped me to make a lot more friends in my grade and the older classes. A lot of the upperclassmen that I'm friends with are really nice and have helped me to transition into becoming a freshman. The transition overall really wasn't as bad as it's made out to be.

The classes are harder and taken more seriously, and there is way more working, but it really doesn't feel much different from the intermediate school. I know that freshmen are at the bottom, but it doesn't really feel that way unless you really think about it. I kind of just stick with my friends and live in my own little bubble. I don't really notice the line between grades levels. I'm friends with older people and people in my own grade, so although maybe I was a little more confident last year being at the top, it doesn't really bother me being at the bottom now," Chickerella said. Evelyn Brown (9) agreed.

Brown said, "It was a little weird coming up to the high school and adjusting, but it doesn't seem very different being at the top and now the bottom."

It seems freshmen had a confidence that a lot of tenth, eleventh, and twelfth graders lacked when they were in their place, and that made the future of these freshmen appear even brighter.

EIGHTY-TWO

Story by: A. Chickerella (III)

Minutes

Faculty members react to new block scheduling

The 2016 school year threw the daily schedule for a loop - literally. The new schedule introduced itself with the title "Arena Scheduling." The schedule functioned on two, four-period days with "CAV Time" built into the end of every day like a free period.

The new schedule created more room for students to schedule classes of their choosing and less classes to worry about nightly. The administration constantly held meetings with teachers to ensure the schedule ran smoothly, and teachers took endless feedback from students to improve their new teaching structures.

Mrs. Scalise (Head of Science

Department) said, "The best part about the new schedule is that the science teachers can do a lab any class period we want. In the past, we would have to wait on the six-day rotation until we had a double period which often got us behind on our labs. I would also always make my exams eighty minutes long, even for Honors."

"Once again, I don't have to worry about splitting exams up over two periods anymore which makes things so much easier for me. The worst part of the old schedule was keeping track of who had double periods on what days last year. I had three Honors and two AP classes, and they would all be on different cycle rotations. Keeping up with it was exhausting. Even some kids in the same classes would have their study halls and gyms flipped so they couldn't even use their study hall to makeup the labs they missed."

Mrs. Valeski (Accounting & Video Game Design) said, "Since I teach a computer class, the longer periods benefited me and my students greatly. We run some pretty large programs on the computers for Video Game Design, and each class period we would waste a good ten minutes just logging on. Then, if I was checking games that period, I watch each student run through their game program, I wouldn't have much time for instruction. Now, I do. It's great."

PUNCHING THE Time Clock

"Prior to teaching I was an assistant buyer for Horne's (currently Macy's) Department Store in Pittsburgh. I absolutely loved the job. I got to travel to NYC, and I even caught a few runway shows. I did this for one year because I didn't want to sub on a daily basis. Once a permanent job opened Kiski, I interviewed, I got it, and I've never looked back. I liked working as a buyer, but my true passion is teaching!"

Kim Poleski (fac)

What did you do before working at Kiski??

"Prior to coming to Kiski, I worked as a nurse at Forbes Regional Hospital. I worked in both the ICU and the ER, but the ER was my favorite because it was always busy. Often, you were seeing patients on what was turning out to be a really bad day, and I would have the chance to try to brighten their day just a bit. I also liked the challenge of figuring out what was going on with each patient; it was like putting the pieces of a puzzle together."

Melissa Ray (fac)

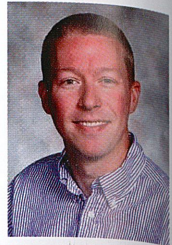

"Before teaching, I worked as an electrical engineer for 11 years. The most interesting project I ever worked on was for a company called Quintech Electronics and Communications. Through this company, I created and built ESPN's matrix switching system. In short, this system was the behind the scenes mechanism that allowed ESPN to tape and broadcast sporting events from around the world."

Fran DeSantis (fac)

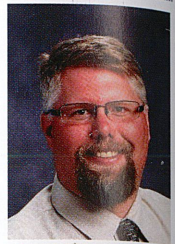

"Before teaching, I was a Research and Quality Assurance Chemist at Ross Products Division of Abbott Laboratories in Columbus, OH. I then became a Pharmaceutical Research Chemist at Magee-Womens Research Institute in Pgh, PA. My first job consisted of analyzing infant formulas and nutritional drinks, and then I moved to working with pharmaceutical products. My responsibilities consisted of routine analytical tests to test the safety and efficacy of different products as well as new medicated shampoo design, eye care formulation improvement, and pharmaceutical dosage formulations for Anti-HIV and anti-cancer therapeutic medications."

Who Are You?

Story by: M. Heavner (12)

Teacher reveals his life outside of school

Teachers did not usually discuss their personal lives. However, the fascinating question of whether their work came home or stayed at school. Regardless of what students believed, not all teachers lived at the school often surfaced.

Just as high schoolers put effort towards occasional homework, teachers also used their time wisely. The trouble came when they finished their school work but could not seem to put their job behind them.

"My personal life consists of everybody asking me to do artsy stuff all the time," Mr. Yuhasz said. "My family and friends ask me for things when I'm home; it's like they expect me to do things for free," Yuhasz said, jokingly.

When teachers did get a chance to focus on family, they made sure it did not affect their work.

"My family life does not affect me at school. The only time is when my son is sick. My wife helps me out when she can, but I'll stay home if I need to," Yuhasz said.

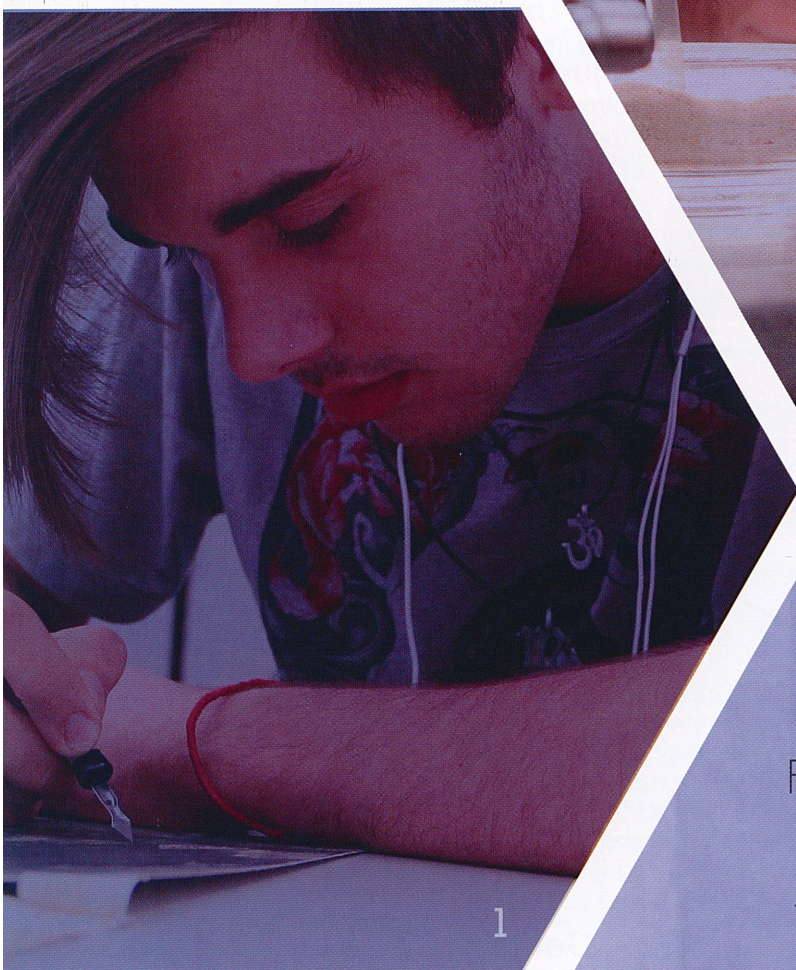

Missing a day of school due to sickness resulted in piles and piles of work. Teachers worried just as much as kids they taught.

Yuhasz said, "The only thing I worry about when I miss a day is what my desk looks like. It's disgusting, and I don't want people to think I'm unorganized. But, it's easy to be unorganized if you get too caught up in life."

MARCH

Story by: T. Craven (12)

Band fiercely faces Delaware competition

On a not-so-balmy October evening, marching band members made last-minute preparations before departing for the University of Delaware; with instruments, equipment, and props loaded up, musicians and directors alike hit the road, free of self-doubt.

No strangers to victory, students devoted every second of their time to maintain high set expectations. Familiar with what Bands of America judges expected from them, the seasoned performers gave their all, and as a result, clinched first place in their AA class and second overall. Though the band fell short in size, they fought an uphill battle in order to measure up to competitors.

The group received high marks in general effect, music, and visuals, sweeping all three captions with their Nemesis show, inspired by a villainous character who lies dormant in society until one day wreaking havoc on his city.

"Nemesis is my favorite show that I've marched in throughout my five years in the band", Jack Pellegrini (12) said.

"The music was super loud and exciting, and I really thought the comic book aesthetic that we developed was really neat. I was happy with how everything turned out, and I'm glad that this is the show that I'm ending my high school marching band career with. We've worked really hard to achieve this outcome," Pellegrini said.

TWIRLING AND WHIRLING...

Focusing intently, Brianna Scanga (11) twirls a chain flag. "My favorite part of this year's show was the costume change we got to do," Scanga said.

She participated in the colorguard for four years.

While shielding his face from the sparks, Seth Roberts (11) welds his project. Roberts said, "I've always wanted to be a welder because my pap was one." Roberts came from having no experience to welding pieces on his own.

SPARKS OF Interest

Story by: K. George (11)

NWCTC offers students varied paths toward success

Vo-tech: a great opportunity for students to fine-tune their skills in a specific profession or area of expertise. Many took this opportunity and ran with it, really having given it their all.

Seth Roberts (11) said, "I really love vo-tech. It gives me a chance to really focus on what I like to do and what I'm good at. I still have to work hard in school, but I also get to train for what I want to do as a profession. I feel really prepared and ready for what comes after high school thanks to going to tech." Shelby Gill (11) also raved about the benefit of attending tech.

"I feel like I can zero-in on what matters most to me and be ready to use it in the real world. Tech is really awesome in that way. I can still go to all my classes and learn, but I'm also directing my energy toward becoming even better at one specific skill that I'll use every day in life," Gill said.

From cosmetology to welding, learners found something that appealed to their interests and knowledge. It seemed that nowhere else could students have such passion for what they did. The students overflowed with gratitude for the opportunities given to them and in turn gave their best effort every day.

With a dozen different programs from which to choose, the Northern Westmoreland County Career and Technology Center allowed learners to master their skills and proved multiple, diverse paths to a successful career existed just 9.7 miles down the road from campus.

Pressure Pushing Down on Me

New schedule hardly brought homework relief

Every high schooler knew the three key components of scholastic success: black coffee, breakdowns, and bloodshot eyes. Stress seemed inevitable for students who exerted every last bit of effort into their hectic routines, but it became a small price to pay in pursuit of their goals.

"The amount of times per week you cry is directly proportional to about three times the amount of AP classes you're taking," Casey Sharek (12) said.

"I rush to finish my homework and usually get to bed around 1 a.m. almost every night. The new schedule doesn't help much. It seems as though I've gotten less time to do double the homework. Teachers are always really understanding though, and the new resource period has really saved my butt so far this year. As hectic as my schedule is, I'm happy with my decision," Sharek said.

Sharek did not go it alone, though. Emily Williams, another senior with a jam-packed schedule, shared in her stress, even teaming up with her friend to tackle their work.

"Taking AP classes this year is tough with the new schedule, but most teachers are willing to do whatever it takes to help, especially Mr. DeSantis. It's beneficial to have strong relationships with teachers and other students. It's taken some time to balance out my schedule. I've had to cut out a few activities because three AP courses can be a lot to take on. The bar is set much higher. These classes require you to think outside of the box," Williams said.

HEAVY LIFTING...

After school, Aiden Sames (11) utilizes the weight room to improve his strength. Sames said, "I lift during the football off-season. It starts in January and ends late April." Sames played an offensive lineman on the varsity football team.

BLOOD PRESSURE...

During class at vo-tech, Carlie Copeland (11) practices taking blood pressure on Brianna Marlette (11). Copeland said, "First, you wrap the cuff around the patient's arm, press the stethoscope bell down, blow it up, and listen." Copeland planned to further her nursing education after high school.

TIME FOR LAB...

During a lab for Mrs. Wein's chemistry class, Haley Custer (10) places a balloon attached to a hot Erlenmeyer flask into a bucket of ice water. Custer said, "There is a lot of pressure not to mess up in the lab because someone could get hurt." Custer enjoyed chem. class, and loved doing labs.

GET OUT THE SAFETY GOGGLES...

A balloon attached to an Erlenmeyer flask gets sucked in during a lab. Celeste Magee (10) said, "The pressure changed from hot to cold, and it caused the balloon to be sucked into the flask." To blow off steam, Magee liked going to the park with her friends and exploring the outdoors.

Young scientists prep labs for futures

Story by: A. Chickerella (11)

Chemical engineers. Biomedical nursing. High school brought many opportunities into the mix for students. With STEM fields on the rise, many students planned to major in science, technology, engineering, and math fields. Every day in his free period, Mitchell McGowan (11), mixed chemicals and performed various other lab-related tasks for the chemistry department.

McGowan said, "Ms. Scalise and Mrs. Wein either leave me a note or come tell me what I need to help them with. The tasks I perform are called lab assistant tasks, and I was interested in doing them because I plan on majoring in chemistry and working in a lab someday. I have taken Honors Chem and AP Chem so I figured I may as well spend some more time getting accustomed to the field."

Jennifer Anderson (12) said, "I am in AP Bio right now to prepare myself for my future. I am going to Duquesne to participate in a dual enrollment program for biomedical engineering and nursing. I am really interested in science, particularly in their double major program because I still get to decide what kind of nurse I want to be. Still, I also get to have the medical engineering experience. Biology is a tough field, but I am so excited to have the privilege to save lives as my career."

MONSTER Mash

Story by: M. Heavner (12)

Monstrous projects consume student artists

Intimidation played a huge factor in the way artists approached projects for their classes. Whether drafting, building, painting, or drawing, monstrous projects always overwhelmed even the most experienced of artists.

The drive for creativity often manifested itself in young artists. It appeared as a sense of adrenaline, going beyond normal methods to achieve a finished product, both capable and passionate the entire time.

"My mindset is to tackle it in small chunks and then hope it turns out alright in the end," Abra Gold (12) said.

It took a special mentality to finish those tough projects. The mental endurance of artists determined whether they followed through or not.

"My creativity comes from my own mind. I think you need to go somewhere peaceful and calm where you can understand who you are and what you want to express," Gold said.

Though some courses abandoned the creative spirit, the drive to complete projects never went unnoticed.

Jacob Kalik (10) said, "We do bookwork in drafting, but I think if you listen carefully when the teacher is explaining and come to class prepared, you'll be fine."

Even the youngest of all art classes accepted the challenge to finish their projects. Nick Balant (12) found insight in his first time taking art.

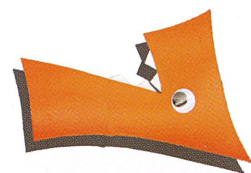

"It has gone great. I have to really practice it because the projects we do have to be really detailed. You have to think about the steps that it takes to reach your goal. If you have a different outlook on things you can finish any goal," Balant said.

MONSTER MATH.

The math department devised a spooky equation equaling 1031, the date of Halloween. Students had to solve the equation in hopes of winning a $50 dollar Sheetz gift card. Numbers 1-13 featuring monster faces hung on the doors of each math teacher, and students had to place them correctly to solve the math monstrosity.

To build his own rendition of Frankenstein, Korbin Meyer (10) intently screws a box into place. "The thing I would most liken my monster to is a triclaps," Meyer said. He has always reveled in mythical creatures.

Working diligently, Dana Hess (12) builds a robot that can assemble a s'more. "I really like the trial and error aspect of constructing the robot," Hess said. Hess took several other technical education classes at the high school.

Vo-tech kids take early option for pursuing passions

"The harder the work, the payoff proved large," Breanna Marlette (11) said. Marlette joined the vocational nursing program and fell in love with the career. She split her time between nursing school and high school, and she dedicated herself to her future in medicine.

Marlette said, "My experience has been amazing. It has been hard at times because we have to demonstrate our skills in front of our instructors. However, once you practice them for a while, they get much easier. I think the nursing field is one of the best someone could enter. My heart has always been set on becoming a nurse, and I feel blessed every day that I received this experience."

Marlette made plans to advance her career even further and become a neonatal nurse once she graduates. She has already visited the hospital and experienced the impact her passion left on others. Still, Roxanne Wilson (10) entered the cosmetology program at tech.

Wilson said, "I have honestly always been interested in doing hair and makeup as long as I can remember. I always had the basic skills but actually going to school for something makes you so much better at it. I'm excited because cosmo can bring people confidence, which can truly be life changing."

Tools of the TRADE

Wrenches

There are various types of wrenches, and like an employee on a payroll, each one has a job. Most wrenches, however, are predominantly used to supply a grip.

Scissors

Cosmetology scissors, otherwise known as "shears," apply specific texture and styles to hair. These scissors differentiate themselves from normal scissors by giving more control to the user.

COOKING UP...

Eager to taste her creation, Megan Bumbarger (12) flips over the fried chicken. "You have to make sure the chicken is just right, not too dark and not too light," Bumbarger said. She had cooked since she entered the second grade.

INSIGHT FROM ELDERS...

To prepare herself for her ideal career, Alysia Hall (10) washes her patient's feet. "I would love to work with the elderly when I get older," Hall said. She always loved the wisdom that older people could give her.

On the milling machine, Luke Larko (11) cuts metal. "Mr T. makes the class fun, and it wouldn't be the same without him," Larko said. He had one-and-a-half years of experience in the field.

Modern Monochromatics

"I don't know what caused this, but I went through a bit of a Medusa phase, starting with that painting. I started reading Greek mythology again which I've always loved, and I even dressed up as her for Halloween. Painting is my favorite medium and getting to work with oils was a unique experience. It's so much easier to blend colors, and if you make a mistake, it's so easy to fix."

Elizabeth Debich (12)

"I like Pirates of the Caribbean and love Captain Jack Sparrow. I chose blue because that's the color of the ocean so I thought that would work well with a pirate. Inspiration for my art comes at random; I'll just get an idea and try to go with it to the best of my ability."

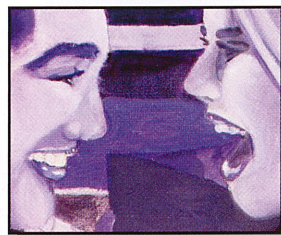

Elizabeth Aston (12)

What was the inspiration behind your artwork?

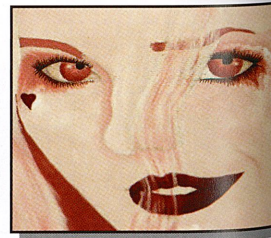

"My inspiration was that I recently found out Gene Wilder had died, and I loved the movie Charlie and the Chocolate Factory. Most of my inspiration for my art is from my emotions and people that are close to me."

Denver Wiester (12)

"My inspiration was the movie NERVE with Dave Franco. I love the characters Vee and Ian and think their first meeting was adorable and hilarious. Normally, I use TV shows, movies, and cartoons for inspiration, but sometimes I just draw images from my imagination."

Abra Gold (12)

"The inspiration behind my monochromatic art piece was Harley Quinn. I had never worked with oil paints before so I thought her makeup might look interesting with that medium. Almost anything could be an inspiration for my artwork. I absolutely love animals so normally they are my main source of inspiration."

With a steady hand, Tyler Schafer (12) paints the Of Mice and Men mural in the 200 building. "I decided to combine the book cover with the movie characters for a more complete picture," Schafer said. Outside of school, he enjoyed practicing his art skills.

ALTERNATIVE ART...

Peering through her jacket, Taylor Craven (12) sketches Twenty-One Pilots' member Tyler Joseph. "I saw this picture and I loved the contrast so I decided to recreate it," Craven said. She recognized Addict with a Pen as her favorite Pilots song.

MAKING IT Real

Dragons come to life

Story by: A. Koontz (11)

A walk through the upstairs corridor or the 500 building's halls revealed talent in student artists. Sculptures, sketches, and paintings emerged as products of those working tirelessly in the various studio spaces. Scratch art filled the remaining wall space amongst the already completed works.

The scratching of the tool against the specialized paper revealed the metallic dragon that Kali Lewis (10) brought to life.

Lewis said, "I really enjoy fantasy and dragons, and I thought that the dragon's scales would look really cool on the scratch paper." The process to creation required a number of steps, each more tedious and time consuming than the previous.

"I enjoyed doing the outline the most because it was the least stressful. Other than the kind that little kids use, I haven't really used scratch paper before," Lewis said. Natural talent still allowed room for difficulty to creep its way in during the creative process.

"The most challenging part was the scales on the face because I had no idea how to show the shading without it being too harsh and having to blend it in with the rest of the facial features," Lewis said.

The combination of challenges, teachings, and talent made the dragon appear ready to soar off the page, down through the atrium, and out the front doors.

JAWS...

Proud of her masterpiece, Kacie Cosentino (10) admires its intricate detail. "My inspiration for the shark came when I felt the texture of the scratch art; I wanted to have an edgy theme, and a shark embodies that perfectly," Cosentino said. Her biggest challenge involved making sure to not scratch too much away.

Book NOOK

Students had to pick the book of their choice and create a folder detailing what they read to hang in the library.

Library advances into new, digital age

Every student inevitably passed the wall of windows to the library on a daily basis as they shuffled through the main hall during class changes. Students that entered through the doors several years prior would hardly recognize the daily activities of the modern day library. One person knew the evolution of the library better than anyone.

Mr. Swanson (Lib) said, "Books used as resources have decreased dramatically. About the only non-fiction book usage comes from the senior research paper. There are some other, smaller uses of the non-fiction books, but not much."

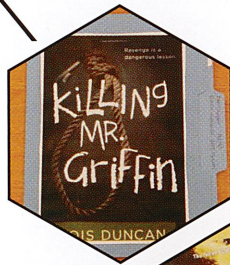

Even just the short amount of time between freshman and junior year has harbored massive advancements for how students used the library.

Bailey Zienick (11) said, "Freshman year, I used the library during study halls more as a place to blow off steam, hang out with my friends, and avoid schoolwork. Now, I use my resource periods to my advantage, getting homework and projects done." The evolution of the library showed no signs of slowing down anytime soon.

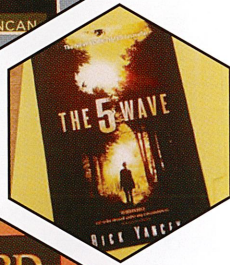

"There needs to be a central location for reliable information attainment. If it means switching to a more digital, or virtual, library, there still needs to be someone to maintain it and update it. One role of the librarian is to help make sure students use reliable resources. I actually have increased the allocation of my library budget, as well as using coffee shop money to drastically increase and improve the fiction collection. Giving students access to popular fiction will only increase the readership levels of students in general," Mr. Swanson said.

Certainly, the library no longer centered exclusively around literature, but instead propelled students to success by preparing them for a digital age.

Many students work in the coffee shop during the resource time to help Mr. Swanson out. Elizabeth Rozich (10) said, "I have to remain on my toes at all times because you never know when a new customer will come in." Rozich worked during day A period 1.

SIT BACK, AND RELAX...

While doing a project for her English class Olivia DiNunzio (10) chats with a friend. Dinunzio said, "The library is a relaxing environment where I can get my work done and hang out with my friends at the same time." DiNunzio visited the library frequently to work on classwork and drink coffee with her friends.

Along with a few friends, Lexi D'Incau (11) works on an independent novel project for her English class. D'Incau said, "The library is a resourceful and calming place to get work done outside of the classroom." D'Incau sang in the KAndescence Show Choir and Cavalier Choir.

Spread the news. The Jazz, Show, and Cavalier Choirs trekked to New York City last May to compete in The Big Apple Choral Festival. The Jazz and Show Choir proved well-adjusted to competition, having brought home the gold in a previous festival in Columbus, Ohio.

"I'd never been to New York City before so it was super exciting," Grace Fowler (11) said, eyes gleaming.

"I've pretty much always wanted to go so it was really like a dream come true. And, the fact that I got to go with Jazz and Show Choir made it even better! We spend so much time practicing together that we've practically become family so it was really special to be able to go together," Fowler said.

Brandon Colaianni (12) thought similarly. Colaianni said, "I love Jazz Choir, and I especially love festivals so it was really fun for me. An aspect of the city I really enjoyed most though was the Apple Store. I was really looking forward to going in there. It's this really cool glass room with a staircase leading down, and the whole store is underground. It was really cool. I enjoyed it a lot."

Members of the choir not only worked hard for months to prepare, but they also looked forward to exploring the city itself. For most, they shared their first Big Apple experience with their fellow members of the program, which made the trip even more memorable.

Volunteering offered a great pathway to help a community and contribute to one's surroundings. Key Club assisted students in this way; providing members opportunities to volunteer for different occasions.

Youth Day of Caring by far ranked the favorite among the club. Groups of four or five spread out to different assigned locations to fix it up or help make repairs.

Grace Fowler (11) said, "My group went to the YMCA. We repainted a dance studio. A few other people and I got paint everywhere, and it was kind of a mess. But, we did alright. They also got us pizza. But, it was late. Youth Day of Caring was still fun overall, even with late pizza."

Olivia Shirley (11) thought the same. "We painted a pavilion and kind of messed around on a merry-go-round when we finished. It was a really cool experience. Plus, they gave us donuts and cookies," Shirley said.

Hallie Zidek (11) also enjoyed Youth Day of Caring. "We don't really do much in Key Club when we're not volunteering, so any opportunity is really exciting for us. Youth Day of Caring is especially good though. I think it's everyone's favorite service job. You get to spend a day with your friends and do work for a good cause. There's really nothing more a volunteering club could ask for," Zidek said.

The notion of leaving high school and possibly becoming a member of the work force appealed to many students enrolled in the programs offered by vo-tech. The Northern Westmoreland Career and Technology Center served as a classroom for those who wished to work in a trade field. In addition to all of the benefits of the program, vo-tech also allowed students to land a job right after high school graduation.

Options involving vo-tech seem*endless. One option had students pursuing a career in the trade they studied. The other, had learners studying more for a hobby. Still, whatever the reasoning, students attending vo-tech on a daily basis valued their time.

"I like the trade, and it's great to know and have that skill," John Payne (12) said. "I go to vo-tech as a hobby. Originally I wanted a career in my field but I decided I wanted to go to the military, instead."

The participants in the vo-tech program looked forward to their open options above all else. The fact that they could pursue a career straight out of high school sounded more appealing to some.

"I plan to take over a restaurant equipment company after high school," Patrick Reagan (12) said. "I think it's really good money, and I don't have to go to a school for it."

"I'm glad it's in my family and I have all the personal knowledge for it," Reagan said.

Vo-tech allowed students to have hands-on experience before they entered a job. The opportunity to pursue a craft, while not fully committing to either a job or college, made all the difference in the world.

The new schedule threw a curveball at the students' day as it doubled the amount of time they spent in classes.

"My friends and I sometimes like the new schedule, and sometimes we don't. The periods are so long; that part is definitely not my favorite," Mancarella said.

Copper sulfate, copper chloride, and ammonium phosphate all resided in one place: The Hood.

Affectionately titled: The Hood, the room between Scalise and Wein's chemistry classes, harbored not only chemicals, but a network of nerds.

Mark Hollinger (11) said, "I love going to the back room. Our AP Chem friend group goes back there to talk about homework and help each other out. We bond, and it feels like we are really unified." The Hood opened the door for other students to gain interest in chemistry, as well.

Justin Schumaker (10) said, "I have Scalise for chemistry, but originally, I was not in her homeroom. I was up there one day to finish a lab, and seeing the older chem students being lab assistants got me really excited to help out in the lab and experiment with chemistry. I went up there every day, and it became a second home."

Other students simply wanted to get away and be with people who shared common interests.

GAME

Story by: A. Koontz (11)

Playing double time

The Friday night lights dimmed with just enough time for part of the team to sleep and wake up for a second round. Mainly underclassmen and juniors found themselves on the rosters for both the Varsity and Junior Varsity teams, meaning they potentially played two games just hours apart. This made waking up on Saturday mornings quite the feat.

Andrew Mason (10) said, "It's pretty hard waking up, especially if we've played at home Friday night and have to travel in the morning. It makes it a little harder if I've gotten to play a lot Friday night."

The Varsity games with screaming student sections and stadiums full of people differ greatly from the far more relaxed JV games.

"On Friday nights I have more adrenaline because to me, it's a bigger game, but on Saturdays, I actually have more fun because I get to be a bigger part of the game," Jack Colecchi (10) said.

"I definitely prefer Varsity over JV because it's a different atmosphere and people are watching me for what I do best," Mason said, agreeing with his dual teammate.

Both individual groups that make up the football relied on those who stepped up to play the game they truly loved.

Cheerleaders discuss yearlong season

Cheerleading embedded a fundamental sense of pride and unity into all of its participants.

Nichole Gabrielli (12) said, "I am honestly joyful and proud of myself for completing my cheerleading career with three years on varsity. I loved every moment of it, and I made lifelong friends throughout my life. But, it also means that my high school years have come to a close."

Sydney Clever (11) said, "The girls

all get extremely close because our season runs literally all year round. It is important that we all get close to each other and ignore any drama that is going on outside the team. We do dangerous stunts and all depend on one another to hold up pyramids, lift each other up, and perform well. If we aren't bonding or if there is tension, one little hiccup could mess up the entire show."

Cassidy Glunt (10) said, "This was my first year on varsity, and something I really like that we do now is getting ready as a team. During the football season, we all go to a team member's house and eat dinner together. We all get ready together and get in the fall spirit. My favorite part of cheerleading is stunting, especially when we got a touchdown and we all celebrated. All in all, the team bonding was an amazing experience."

LOUD AND PROUD...

To show her support, Mindy Long (12) cheers the basketball team on between quarters. "It is something special to be able to watch and root for my peers," Long said. She also exemplified leadership as a captain.

SWING FOR SEMIFINALS

Golf team
rounds out
season

The WPIAL golf semifinals showcased two of Kiski Area's best golfers as they swung their way through the season. Athletes who play multiple sports often have to adjust their game play as their technique varies for each; golf proved no exception. Nicholas Yohe (11) said,

"Baseball can really affect how you swing your club. They are two similar swings, but they're different enough that you have to change your wrists in order to be right, so it definitely takes practice."

Once adjustments were made, some golfers relied on outside forces to improve their game. Drake Neumann (12) said,

"Mr. Bruno taught me the equation $P=MV$, so I ate a lot of food to increase my momentum."

Yohe relied heavily on practicing as much as possible to improve himself.

"I have been playing golf for about three years now. I go to the course at least once a day, sometimes I play 36 holes or 45 holes in one day," Yohe said.

When asked how it felt to be one of just two members from the golf team to reach semifinals both were humble claiming it was "just another day", and they hoped for more team members to experience it in the following season.

Girls softball team shows what they can do

With nerves mounting, softball players made their way to home plate one by one, assumed batting position, and drew in one last calming breath before the ball whizzed toward their heads. In one swift movement, the bat met its intended target, sending it far beyond the outfield. Onlookers erupted in cheer as the girls made their victory laps around the field and back to the dugout for some well-deserved praise. Hard work does pay off every time, right?

In a perfect world, yes. However, not every moment, whether it pertains to athletics or academics, is as idealistic as this one. After a series of rocky seasons, the softball team learned to keep their heads up through thick and thin.

"We've gotten used to losing over the past two seasons, but I remind myself that it isn't the end of the world. I use my failures to my advantage and plan to adjust for the next game. It isn't about winning. It's about putting in hard work despite whatever the outcome may be," Erin Weaver (11) said.

Alex Graf (12) agreed, and said "You should give your all no matter what, and it's important that criticism be used to improve upon skills. We're never discouraged by failure. Our coaches are always sure to remind us of our potential."

Despite harsh losses, positivity among players peaked, and the team anticipated an exciting 2017 season.

"Nervousness sets in at first," said Weaver. "But love for the game takes care of that eventually."

TAKE ME OUT TO THE BALL GAME...

Determined to get the out, Kelsey Sofaly (11) fields the ball from the outfield. "I play shortstop and outfield, but my favorite position is second base," Sofaly said. Sofaly played on the Pittsburgh Freedom travel team in the off season.

BATTER UP...

Preparing to swing, Alexa Nagy (10) eyes up the opposing team's pitcher. "My routine every time I go up to bat is very simple. I readjust my batting gloves every time," Nagy said. Typically, Nagy covered first base for the team.

BRING IT IN.
Before the game, Jesse Simendinger (11) joins her team in a huddle. "We have a team prayer before every game to make sure we all stay safe, play by the rules, and get motivated," Simendinger said. Simendinger played on the Pittsburgh Predators travel team during the off-season.

Student trainers
futures

Story by: K. George (11)

Out

Student trainers have become a quintessential part of sports teams - from tending to wounds to having water ready, they cared for and nourished the athletes who worked tirelessly for success.

"It's so helpful to have the trainers around," said MaKenna Hayes (11). "They're really good helpers and super kind to everyone. It also kind of forces the whole team to work harder since there's no room for excuses. You can't exactly leave practice for an injury when there are people right there to help you. The soccer team's productivity has really increased thanks to trainers."

"Tennis is really physical, and it's not hard to get scraped up. Having the trainers there with bandages ready to pick you up when you fall almost feels like special treatment," Alexis Shaffer (11).

Hayes said, "They just do small stuff that's really helpful and speeds things along so we have more time to focus on actual playing than having to waste time doing stuff like filling the water jugs. They're really cool. They just kind of hang out in between the fields and if we're lucky, they'll bring us Gatorade. Sometimes they even leave class with us to travel to other schools. They just become part of the team, and it would be weird and almost incomplete without them there."

"I feel the same way," Shaffer said with a nod, "It would be so empty without them there."

"It almost feels like being waited on. They fill our water bottles and stretch us out if we get hurt. It feels like we have a parent there that's supporting us and waiting to help. They are all really nice and laid-back, the team wouldn't be the same without them," Katelyn Brown (11) said.

New players step up to the plate

For as long as high school competition existed, every team went through a period of rebuilding. The teams changed players and coaches, but no team ever avoided the process of losing seniors.

Approaching an end to the school year, the baseball team began their season with the best chance they had at making playoffs. The varsity team, comprised mainly of seniors, fought their way through the season while also having to show other players the ropes.

"We have three players coming back that played varsity last year," Nate Kiebler (12) said. "A lot of the younger kids also have great potential."

Any team, whether professional or amateur, that lost the majority of its players expected to struggle. The graduation of last year's senior class limited the experience and leadership needed to expand the program.

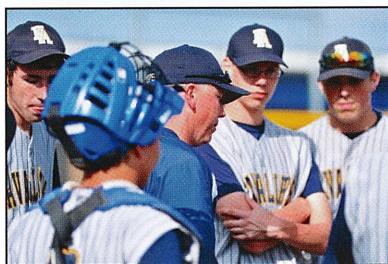

"We have a lot of talented younger kids in the program," Tyler Baum (12) said. "During our winter workouts both the upperclassmen and coaches will push them to the next level."

The underclassmen found themselves on a team that lost over half of its numbers by season's end. For players on the Junior Varsity team the opportunity for more playing time and experience presented itself.

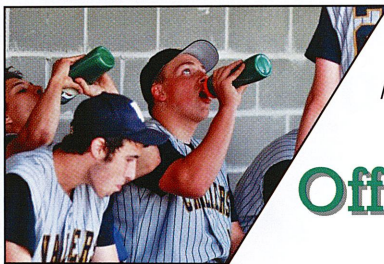

"I expect the team to perform great this year," Korey Shoupe (12) said. "We have a lot of great talent coming back."

HIT THE POOL

Swim captains commend each other

Snapping their caps over tangles of chlorine saturated hair, swimmers impatiently paced back and forth across the pool deck, listening intently for their heat through a hubbub of laughter and shouting that echoed through the stands. Each second until race time felt like an eternity, but once it arrived, team members stepped up to the block, took their marks, and launched themselves into their stroke of choice. Finally, as they reached for the finish line, swimmers felt that pang of pride they had craved since the morning bus ride and hoisted themselves from the water, still drenched in an overwhelming sense of victory.

"Over the past season I think I've become closest with Amanda Munzek," Caleb Hansen (11) said. "We're both captains this year, so we've been able to spend a lot of time together. Though I'm in a position of leadership myself, she's helped me to transform into a better role model. I've become more confident, especially when I have to lead my team. I'm not as apprehensive when it comes to speaking my mind. I think I owe that change in myself to her."

In regard to swimming, senior Amanda Munzek's confidence never seemed to waver.

"I've been involved in the sport since I was a kid, so I felt really comfortable stepping into this sort of responsibility. Everyone puts in the work to make it to every practice, even in the mornings. Much of what they've accomplished is on them, but it's always nice to hear that I'm making even the littlest bit of difference in their experience. Everyone makes a point to support one another, and that's what makes the team feel like family," Munzek said.

"The games always ended intensely," said Hannah Potter (9). "I play varsity and the competition requires a lot of focus. During JV we all sit on the sideline and cheer them

Katelyn Brown (11) said, "I've always played basketball; yes, being almost six feet tall had something to do with it. My legs are long, and I'm fast. I'm also incredibly focused. Away games are super competitive, and I've been going to them all my life. During the games, I have fun because I love playing the game."

Girls' tennis team adjusts to new coach

Girls tennis acted as one of the fall sports that often fell in the shadow of other sports. Playing tennis gave girls the opportunity to experience and learn the rules of the game while also enjoying a fun pastime.

With several matches a week, the girls took on each and every set with the expectation of success. The team also dealt with a transition of coaches after the conclusion of last season. Marissa Johnson (12) reacted to the change and discussed the previous change in coaches.

"Mrs. Rolling had a big plate to fill when Mr. Antenucci left. She did such a great job and made it really fun. Our new coach, Coach Goerk, really changed the team's attitude and how we played together and individually. He has a lot of background with tennis and it really helped us and improved the team," Johnson said. Comprised mostly of younger players, those that were new to the sport hardly noticed the change. Olivia Shirley (11) said,

"Most of the team were freshman players so it was not anything new for them. But for the upperclassmen it took a while to adjust." Johnson weighed in on the benefits of the change and how the it affected the older players.

"We were able to compete more with our competitors and the higher level teams. We learned something new every day," said Johnson.

GAME SET...

Confidence is key

Story by: T. Craven (12)

With pressure to scoop up another victory mounting, nervousness set in long before game time, however, volleyball players refused to let themselves fall victim to self-doubt. These champions hustled to their positions on the court at the start of each match with confidence, but not without first huddling up on the sideline as a team.

The girls sought encouragement, and found it in staggering amounts among their newly formed family. Together, they worked as one to overcome obstacles in and out of the gym, and players looked to establish chemistry at every opportunity.

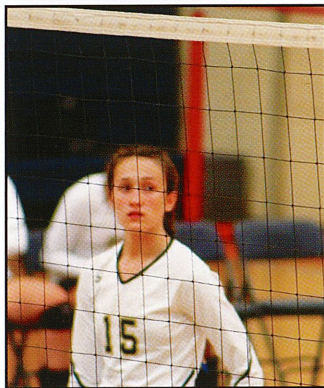

Jen Anderson (12) said, "My team always wants to bring out the best in me as a player. We're inseparable during the season, and they're always around to guide me in the right direction. I'm inspired to push myself, and without them, I wouldn't be who I am today."

Anderson went on to describe the team as a family, and fellow player, Liz Debich (12), shared a similar sentiment.

"I'm proud to to call my team a second family. These girls are like my sisters, and without everyone's support, we couldn't have accomplished our goals throughout the year. I couldn't be more grateful for the friendships I've formed through volleyball," Debich said.

Anderson said, "I know I'll miss being apart of the team more than I anticipate. It's tough to let go of a game that's made such an impact on my life."

LIKE A FISH IN A NET...
Behind the net, Kayla Zelanka (10) glances to the other side of the court, waiting for the line judge to call the ball in or out. Zelanka said, "The audience is my biggest inspiration to play well. When there are people watching, I don't want to do bad. As coach always says, 'Bodies on the floor, balls in the air,' meaning nothing can hit the floor." In addition to volleyball, Zelanka played basketball during the winter.

YOU GOT SERVED...

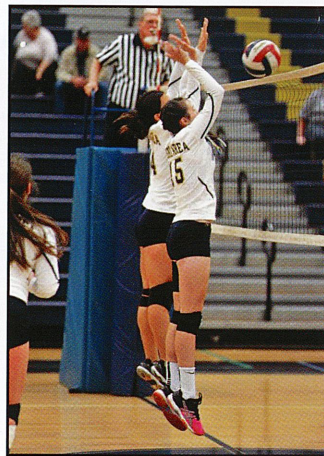

Concentrating on the ball, Jen Anderson (12) prepares to use her topspin serve against the opposing team. "I always think, 'Jen you need to get this ball in,' every time I go back to serve. I make myself take a deep breath and relax," Anderson said. After graduation, she planned to continue her volleyball career and pursue nursing.

THE PERFECT PASS...
To pass the ball, Erin Weaver (11) adjusts her body in order to send it to the setter. "The key to passing is to set your feet wide, create a good platform, and pray for the best. On the court, I want to do my best for the team," Weaver said. She also served as the starting pitcher for the girls' softball team in the spring.

Boys step up game

Last season, the leaves fell off of the trees and the turf grew wet with the early days of winter. The loud stadiums and cheering fans echoed for months through the hallways of the school. The boys soccer team finished their season with a tough loss in the late rounds of the playoffs, the best the team had performed in recent school history.

"You knew it was something special. Everybody came together and played as a team, and it showed in the scoring lines," Nicholas Bisceglia said.

The returning players looked forward to another strong season. After losing a number of key players the team expected the underclassmen to step up.

"We're looking forward to at least making it to the second round of the playoffs this year," Jeffrey Wilkinson (11) said.

The younger players witnessed the importance of never giving up. Teamwork played the biggest part in the previous success and the long season wore down on the players. However, the team never doubted its new members.

"We're hoping that we make it even farther than last year, always looking to improve," Wilkinson said.

The Boys team finished last season on a high note. Despite their playoff loss they knew next year surely held the potential to outdo the previous. Each coach and player hoped only the best for the next year.

Runners speed past expectations

3.1 miles. Those 3.1 miles defined the fall season for the cross country team. Rarely did a team possess both excellence and enjoyment. Rarely a team produced a female and male state qualifier. The cross country team fought hard for their 5 and 2 season, and still managed to have fun along the way.

Nicholas Gabrielli (11) said, "Meets are great places to meet new people. We race against hundreds of people during big invitationals and multiple times I've met guys incredibly similar to me, and it's awesome, that's why I think they are the best part. As for practices, we work harder than anyone, but we still have a good time."

Gabrielli ran closely with Eric Kennedy (12), who placed exceptionally well in the boys section and received second place at counties and qualified for states yet again. The female qualifier, Kierra Shreffler (10), endearingly called "Ki", seemed to hold the title of the year's breakout runner, since she placed at almost every meet on varsity, and also qualified for states alongside Kennedy.

Mia Hartman (11) said, "Ki making it to states was a really big deal for the girls; we are all really close and we are so excited for her. Before every meet, the girls warm up together; before we line up, we form our happy circle and we say a little prayer that we will run a good and safe race. It makes us all feel secure, confident, and together. It's not just the girls that are really close, it is the whole team. We even had a cute pasta party before WPIALS."

The team did more than just bond during the season.

Gabrielli (11) said, "The team always does things together. We have bonfires and hang out outside school, which I've hosted a few times. Last year some of us went camping, and we are always running races outside school together."

The cross country team displayed unity and talent all through the season which quite possibly held the key to their success.

To help motivate each other, multiple cross country girls join in a team huddle. "In a sport like cross country, everyone had a great race. You're proud of your team's overall accomplishments and can celebrate together," Mia Hartman (11) said. About 13 girls competed in the cross country season.

Wrestlers examine reasons for success

Student wrestlers hustled to brush off feelings of anxiety in the time it took to approach center mat from the sideline. The high school's own "Band of Brothers" demanded nothing less than greatness from one another as they settled into position and locked eyes with their opponents, vowing to pin down a WPIAL win. Despite varying outcomes of individual matches, the team produced enough talent to clinch a first place victory for the first time in 13 years, sending wrestlers and onlookers alike into a triumphant roar.

For Tom Starr (12) and Danny Starr (11), the team's theme of celebrating brotherhood made the win all the more memorable.

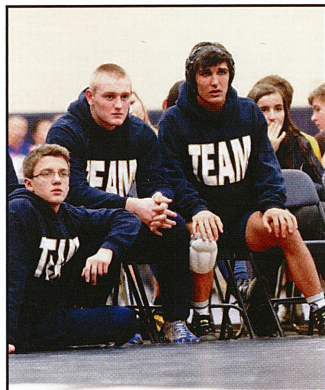

"Danny and I have been wrestling together since we were little kids," Tom Starr said. "To be back to back with my brother during these matches was amazing. Danny and I sort of have a mutual push between us. We urge each other to be at our best when we feel like slacking. Pushing the boundaries together made the moment feel electric. The adrenaline was there, and it was an intense moment when I saw the outcome of the team's hard work."

Danny Starr said, "Tom and I always build each other up. He's one of the most positive guys I know, and I owe a lot of my success this season to him. He reminds me of what's important when I don't feel like putting my all into not only practices, but the day. I wouldn't be where I am without him."

LET'S GO...

During a nerve-wracking match, Joey Blumer (12) watches his brother from the edge of his seat. Blumer said, "It's awesome to see my younger brother do well. I get more nervous during his matches than I do for my own." Blumer attributed the team's success to the energy and support all of the guys possessed.

READY, SET...

As in pre-match tradition, upcoming wrestler Jerod Curcio (9) runs through the tunnel of his teammates and coaches. Curcio said, "When I run out, I am thinking about how I need to wrestle to the best of my ability in order to help the team." Curcio played JV baseball outside of wrestling.

Sixteen-to-two. Five-nothing. The hockey team took home numerous landslide victories throughout the season. A team that formed in middle school grew into a dominant varsity force that held a brotherly bond throughout all those years.

"The best adjective to describe our team has to be: heart," Michael Eisman (11) said. "The team has been together forever, and most of us play together on one to three outside leagues. The team was never directly affiliated with the school, but anytime the school pumps up our student section, (it's a really cool balcony over the ice where you can see everything), everyone has a blast. Whenever we play a team we know we can beat, we really join together and unite as brothers, and that's how sometimes we end up with over ten goals. As of lately, we have been doing pretty good in our section, placing around the top. We always come pretty close to playoffs, and for the sake of all our amazing seniors, I really hope we make it."

Ben Sites (12) said, "We owe a lot of our success to our goalie Alex. The offense may score a lot of goals, but he surely doesn't let very many in either. I've been playing hockey a long time and since I'm a senior, I am going to miss playing with the team when I graduate. I can safely say my experience with hockey has been intense, brutal, and most of all, well worth it."

TAKE YOUR

Despite the weather, hours, and even pain,, you can find the track and field team running, working out, and preparing for competition.

Jumper and sprinter Jalen Cloud (12) said, "They're usually eight to nine hours long, and once we were there for thirteen. I love them, even though they can be crazy, especially when the weather gets out of control. The one meet was postponed by, like, an hour and a half because it rained."

With meets just as intense as states, if not more, it gets real fast. Literally. "We do drills and exercises that help you get stronger, and we lift weights," said Cloud.

Kierra Shreffler (10), who specializes in the 800 meter run, said, "Spring track has a lot of meets. A lot of the time it feels pretty never ending."

But when invitationals roll around, all of the training paid off. "The feeling of just running when it really matters the most is the best thing in the world. Especially when you do well," said Shreffler, her voice laced with joy.

Shreffler recently pushed her way into the leader board, setting a seventh-fastest school record. "It feels really awesome, and I'm pretty honored to be in the records with people from the school's past. It's really special."

On the lighter side, the team also has a lot of fun. "Before your event at competition, you can kind of just do whatever you want,"

Cloud said, a bit mischievously, "AND there's food, so it's pretty much perfect."

He remembered an instance from his sophomore year. "We made a jump squad chant that year. It was the funniest thing ever, and it's probably my all-time favorite memory from track. I'll remember it forever," Cloud said.

Shreffler looked back on a series of days. "We do Workout Wednesdays! They're challenging, but we have a lot of fun together preparing for meets and stuff. It's probably my favorite part of track. I look forward to it all the time," Shreffler said.

While track demands a lot, the reward proved worth all of it, the weather, hours, and blood, sweat, and tears.

Boys' basketball team dunks on opponents to improve record

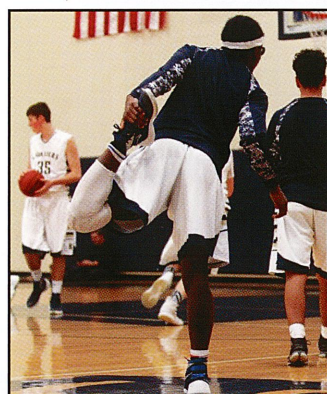

The most memorable moment in any athlete's career occurred after upsetting a rival opponent. For the boys basketball team, they enjoyed more than just one victory during the regular season. Following an early season dry spell, the team went on to win four of their non-conference games. In addition to scoring victories outside their class, they continued their impressive season with a rapid win streak, crushing three of their most important conference games in a row. The players reflected on the most exciting moments during their sweep.

"When we began winning our conference games, then it started to get interesting" Connor Martin (12) said. "First, we beat Franklin Regional, but we knew we had better teams in our section that we had to play. The next game was against Highlands. It was my favorite win because they were supposed to be one of the best teams in the WPIAL, and we beat them." Some players thought of their favorite games in a more unique way.

"My favorite game was against Franklin Regional. I scored the most points, and we also won an important conference game that set us up for the playoffs," Delino Franklin (12) said.

Kyle Harris (12) also played a critical role in the series of games. "Highlands was ranked number three in our section, and we were the underdogs so we had to go to their court for the game. I made a three-pointer at the buzzer, and we won in a great upset," Harris said.

RAP RITUALS.

Almost set for all the action, Tracey Moore (10) stretches before the game. "I get hyped-up for the game by listening to music, making shots, and talking about plays with my team," Moore said. His number one song on the pre-game playlist was Bad and Boujee by Migos.

GIVE HIM A HAND...
Engaging in a unique handshake with Nick Bisceglia, Ryne Wallace (10) gives each member of the starting lineup a special sequence. "I love getting to be the hand shaker since it allows me to pass on good luck to my teammates," Wallace said. The luck soon went back to him when he made several three-point shots.

DEFEND TILL THE END...
Arms thrust into the air, Kyle Harris (12) defends a Highlands player trying to distract him and produce a turnover. Harris said, "I'm comfortable on the court, but I'd rather lose by a lot than by two or three. The best moment this season was beating out rival Highlands who was ranked 3rd in 5A." Harris planned to graduate high school and go into a physical therapy or a sports-related field.

Summer preps athletes for year

Story by: M. Heavner (12)

The morning sun peeked above the dense trees, and the day got hotter with its rising. Almost every high school student in America slept in while enjoying their time off from school. Routines varied and schedules did not exist for the two-and-a-half months students did not attend classes. In the minds of young athletes, however, early morning practice took away that time. The girls soccer team woke early every morning in the summer to perfect their abilities.

"We have practice twice a week and then towards the middle of August, we start mandatories on Monday-Friday," Helena Townsend (12) said.

The team hoped the sacrifice made in the summer would pay off in the fall. With conditioning practices every morning, the players knew the reasons behind the pain.

"No matter how much we dread waking up at 6 a.m. in the summer to go and run, it helped us reach the playoffs this year," Alex Heinle (12) said.

Outrunning defenders and putting moves on defenses came in good time. With quiet conditioning practice, besides a whistle and the heavy breathing of teammates, each player focused on the upcoming season.

"I think that conditioning has a major, positive effect on our performance" Heinle said.

Giving up never entered the minds of the girls while at a morning practice. They dedicated themselves above and beyond anything coaches asked. The sessions went without complaints as players knew what they volunteered for.

Alyssa Hodnik (12) said, "Practice isn't required until mandatories start."

Non-mandatory practices did not stop each player from joining the rest of their team long before it was required.

"It is helpful if you go because then you get to know the people you're going to be playing with, and it helps you get in shape for pre season," Hodnik said.

Then again, not all aspects of practice received bad reactions. Between running and skill work, the team created memories.

"As miserable as it is, the conditioning gets us in game winning shape," Jean Starr (10) said.

They learned advice on the importance of what they wanted to accomplish.

"Conditioning is important to making your season successful" Natalie Beaufort (12) said. "If you aren't in shape for the season, then you won't be able to keep up with the top teams."

Our WATERCOLOR WORLD

Story by: A. Koontz (12)

Staff Sees Through Transition Year

As last year's yearbook progressed into its final edits and submissions, the entire yearbook staff silently and anxiously awaited news regarding the future of the program they all cared so greatly about.

Knowing nothing of the new adviser's name given to the staff, my Co-Editor-In-Chief (CEIC) and I apprehensively climbed the stairs in the atrium to greet the person that would take over a renowned program and guide us throughout the year. Entering the singular art classroom amongst the plethora of science rooms, Mrs. Lynch met us with a wide welcoming smile and pastel lanterns hanging from the ceiling behind her.

Describing her view of our first impression, CEIC Hallie Zidek (11) said, "Initially, I actually thought she was going to be very strict and have a lot of rules. My impression of her changed right after I spent a Cav Time with her. I easily forgot about the now off-limits yearbook room as soon as I saw how she turned a science lab into a beautifully decorated art/yearbook room. I saw how creative, driven, and positive she was. That positive energy she had that day is there every day, and it makes me so happy. As the year progressed, I also realized how caring of a person she is. She always knows right away if something is wrong and is always there if you need her."

As each day passed since summer, days filled with excited emails about future plans accumulated, shaping how we would remember our high school experience. From personalized and punny Christmas gifts to teaching us how to work like the best well-oiled machine during crunch time deadlines,

Mrs. Lynch changed us all a little bit.

"My favorite memory that I have with her would be every single Cav Time when she would come over to see what yearbook progress I was making. But, I was actually painting watercolor pictures of sloths. She would just shake her head and continue on," Zidek said.

I know I speak on behalf of the entire yearbook staff when I extend the most sincere thank you to Mrs. Lynch for her endless hard work, bottomless creativity, and her genuine care for each and every one of us.

1. "Yearbook is a lot of fun, and working with everyone is always a great time. It can be super stressful to meet the deadlines, but when you do, it's an extremely rewarding experience."

Maddy Sulava (11)
(Reporting)

2. "My favorite thing about yearbook is the atmosphere of everything. I love that everyone is so welcoming and always so nice to each other and helpful. My most memorable moment was seeing the spreads for the book and seeing that the pictures I took were going to be in the final design; it made this new experience so much more real."

Olivia Shirley (11)

I always have something to do or somewhere to go, and I get to capture exciting moments that people can share and remember after high school."

Grace Fowler (11)

12. "Yearbook has such a great atmosphere. We can go there every day and express ourselves while still being extremely productive."

Taylor Love (11)

13. "Yearbook takes a lot of hard work to meet the deadlines, but is very manageable. Depending on what part of yearbook you want to be a part of, you must be very organized and willing to put in the effort. But, overall, it is a fun staff to be a part of because of the environment it offers."

Kylie George (11)
(Literary)

17. "If I were to explain yearbook to someone, I would say that it is an enjoyable experience that I would certainly recommend. Everyone is friendly, goal-oriented, and organized. It is a great place to come and feel at home. It is great to be around a great group of people, all focused on one main goal."

Hallie Zidek (11)

20. "There are so many wonderful things that go on with yearbook. My absolute favorite is how we are able to express ourselves through our work. It does not matter which department we are in, there is still some way to do so on staff. It's great."

Amanda Haught (12)
(Photoshop)

21. "My favorite thing about yearbook is getting to work with my peers and Mrs. Lynch on her first yearbook."

Sarah Custer (12)

It teaches you to manage your time and how to work together in ways nothing else can. You realize very quickly you're dealing with very real deadlines and very real money."

ALL ABOUT THAT BASS...

After school, musician Dalton Orange (9) tunes his bass. "The hardest thing about playing in the rhythm section is trying to make the chords sound in tune and keep tempo, all while the rest of the band is playing," Orange said. Orange had played electric bass for three years and started upright bass a year ago.

ALL THAT JAZZ...

During a jazz band dress rehearsal, Stephen Scassera (11) and Jack Pellegrini (12) groove to their advanced jazz tune. "There are a lot of difficult riffs in the songs we play so practice is crucial for success," Pellegrini said. He and Scassera also played in Wind Ensemble and the highly respected Marching Band.

We have been very lucky to have had a front row seat to the past 18 years of your life. We are so proud of you and all you have accomplished. It has been such a joy to watch you grow into the beautiful, kind and loving young woman you are today. Life is a journey that will take a lot of twists and turns, but we all must do it. We never know which road to follow, but in every path, we learn and grow. Just remember as you are now starting another part of your journey; continue to work hard, follow your dreams and believe in yourself. You can do anything you put your mind to! You may have thought this day would never come, but for us, it came too soon. Please, never second guess who you are or where you have been and most importantly, where you are going. There is so much we could say to you, but the most important thing we want you to know...Wherever your road takes you, we will ALWAYS be there to support and love you! We look forward to seeing what your future holds!

You are a person that is strong and knows what he wants to do. Strive for your dreams and reach the stars. Your kindness, strength, and willingness to help others is out of this world. Good luck in all you do, and congratulations. We are proud.

Love, Mommy and Meaghan

Spencer,

Seventeen years ago, you entered the world, changing our lives for the better. It seems like yesterday we followed you on the first day of kindergarten, keeping our distance to not be seen, just so we knew you were okay.

We have had the pleasure of watching you grow into a strong, independent, and intelligent young woman. Your kind-hearted, free-spirited personality always shining through. We love that your inner beauty is as radiant as your outer beauty.

As you embark on the next chapter of your life, know that you can and will accomplish anything you set your mind to. Your compassion will serve you well in your chosen profession. Keep in mind, although we may not be able to follow you to make sure you are okay, we will never be too far away.

"See It Through - That is a VERY POWERFUL and STRONG phrase. It shows how we can 'see through' some of the tough times that we experience and push to a better future. We can 'see through' all of the sacrifices we have made and realize the good we have brought to the world. This phrase is the motivation that pushes me to be a better person and 'see through' the bad in the world and realize how we all are truly good in our own little way."

SENIOR Specials

LETTER FROM THE Editors

The book you're holding in your hands is the product of the hardest work we have ever done. As cheesy as it sounds, the memories we've made through every step of helping to create this book are what have shaped both our junior years and our high school experiences. We'll never forget the day our theme came to life in the yearbook room, our trip to Slippery Rock for summer camp, or the endless Cav Times spent creating the story of our year. We hope you have enjoyed turning each page and remembering this past year as much as we adored the chance to create this time capsule.

Literary: Kylie, though I'm sure you had no idea what you were getting into when we asked you to apply to staff last year, your ability to so beautifully string words together is incredible and has added so much to each story you've written. Taylor, you can write from the most innovative angles, no matter how seemingly straightforward the topic was, and it made so many of the pages infinitely better. Matt, though a man of few spoken words, your stories had such a poetic way of making me feel as if I was actually at the event you were writing about every time I sat down to edit them. Aubry, thank you for having everything done early, making editing your stories a dream, and for writing last minute stories in a one night when I frantically email you. You can all take solace in the fact that the conclusion of this book means the end to my pun-filled emails, referring to us as the most "lit" lit staff there ever was.

Reporting: Sophie, the energy you brought every day was never-ending, and it helped so much on days when deadlines rapidly approached to know you would be bouncing out the door to get as much as possible accomplished. Maddie, conversations had over watercolor painting are some of my absolute favorite memories of our time in yearbook this year; please never stop painting pictures of otters and pizza. Ndunge, your ability to track down seemingly non-existent people and capture quotes from them is admirable. Taylor, remember when I casually mentioned that you were on yearbook staff last year? I'm beyond happy that I had you by my side throughout this year...even when you were ready to kill me when you figured out what I had gotten you into. Liz, you've managed to not only flawlessly switch staffs, but become the reporting editor while designing nearly every mod in the book. Your creative brain and dedication are exemplified on every page in this book.

Photography: Grace, you are truly an inspiration. Not a day went by this year where you didn't come into the yearbook room stressed beyond words, but still asking what there is for you to accomplish. Thank you for all of your efforts. Liv and Kylie, you both are so beautiful, inside and out. I know the adjustment from last year to this year was extremely demanding, especially the first deadline. But, you both took time out of your busy days to achieve what was needed to be done. Gabby, your personality radiated every time that you stepped foot into the yearbook room. You are so sweet and talented. I hope you enjoyed your first year being on yearbook staff! Sarah, I'm going to miss your delightful sense of humor next year. I cannot believe that you are a senior. I hope you continue to take pictures because you have such an incredible talent!

Business: Helena, Payton and Maddie, I'm sure this year was very stressful since it was your first year on staff, but you guys were so efficient, as if you were already professionals. I wish you three would have joined staff earlier! Maddy, thank you so much for stepping up to Bri's position. I know you had big shoes to fill, but you most certainly filled them. I don't know how we would have survived without you!

Photoshop: Jack, thanks for always turning our last minute ideas into masterpieces. Without you, our book would not have had that special touch. Amanda, you have accomplished so much throughout your years on staff! I admire your patience and efficient ability to complete a ton of work. I am not sure how we are going to survive next year without you two! Thank you so much for all of your hard work!

While considered inappropriate in some yearbook judging forums, the Campus staff feels that the Senior Specials represent a Cavalier tradition worth keeping. Sometime after the winter holiday break, the yearbook staff designates one week for all seniors to vote on their favorites in a wide variety of categories. The staff collectively decides which categories to include and which to eliminate. Still, the staff tries to include only categories that reflect positively on the students.

Only the yearbook adviser counts the ballots for each and every category; yearbook staff members play no role in the election.

To maximize the opportunity for each student to receive a Senior Special, no senior may win two categories, with the exception of the "Best Friends" and "Class Couple" categories. Should one student win two or more categories, the yearbook adviser governs the final decision on how to award each category.

PF: Thank you for helping us throughout our millions of questions and for always taking the time to teach us how to make this book the best it possibly could be. Even though you're not now officially a part of staff, you have continued to improve this program and will forever be a part of our team.

Mrs. Lynch: We cannot begin to thank you for everything you have done for us and the entire staff all year long. On day one, you arrived ready to make this book the best it possibly could, and it meant the world to us. This book would not have been possible without your care, precision, and creativity. Deadlines completed in mere weeks happened because you unified us in ways we did not know possible. We cannot tell you how much it means to us to know how much you genuinely care about our opinions, we as a people, and the final outcome of this book.

Hallie: Ah! I am so grateful for the fact that we were able to be co editors this year. Plans we made for this book sitting in our yearbook room study hall have come to life in more ways than I could have ever dreamed. Our minds were perfectly on the same track for everything from colors to fonts and aesthetic choices, and it made this entire process so very seamless. I cannot wait to see what we'll come up with for next year... oh and thank you for all the Instagram pictures taken during our Pittsburgh sign hunt.

Angela: Honestly, yearbook would not have been as enjoyable if I didn't have you by my side co-editing. Our identical style preferences and exquisite taste in fonts (Tall Dark and Handsome) have lead the way to so many creative breakthroughs, and I cannot wait to make more next year! Our bold ideas tend to always lead to an early engagement, but that's okay. Thank you for all of the memories; I cannot wait to create more. P.S.: My watercolor sloths do actually look like sloths, so stop the hating.

Hallie Zidek & Angela Koontz

PARENT Ads

During the first week of school, each senior receives a form that defines everything parents need to know about Parent Ads. The form outlines pricing, requirements for the ad, and relative deadlines.

The yearbook staff does its best to personalize each ad, and this takes a considerable amount of time. Furthermore, each year, the staff has only a limited amount of space for Parent Ads. Hence, to guarantee that individual ads will appear in the book, the staff suggests that parents submit them as soon as possible. The Campus staff reserves the right to deny Parent Ads once the designated amount of space has become filled.

CAMPUS Pricing

Students order books during Campus Weeks, the first two full weeks after Labor Day. (Note: Campus Weeks are subject to change, depending on when school starts each year.) Each student must fill out a yearbook ordering form, place it in an envelope with the appropriate payment, and drop it in the wooden collection box outside room 100.

Students may pay half during Campus Weeks and half after the December holiday break if they wish. Still, if the student misses the announced deadline for second payments, a late fee may occur.

After Campus Weeks, students will pay an additional $10 for each book ordered.

The staff also offers the opportunity for students to order books online at yearbookforever.com. Additionally, those students have the opportunity to purchase various other items, but only when ordering online.

If there are books available at the end of the year, the yearbook staff will sell them on a first-come-first-serve basis.

CLIENT Satisfaction

Because the yearbook represents a student conceived, planned, and produced publication, the staff cannot guarantee complete satisfaction to the purchaser. Hence, the staff will not refund money for poor portrait quality, misspelled names, incorrect grade designation in captions, etc. Books returned for refunds must not have any writing in them and cannot display any obvious damage done by the student. Once returned, the book becomes the property of the staff and may be resold at the current cost.

The yearbook staff will exchange books only for certain reasons. No exchanges will transpire unless the adviser determines that the book has a major flaw such as missing or upside-down pages. All refunds and exchanges happen only at the discretion of the adviser.

Should the yearbook staff have no record of a student ordering a book, the student must produce a canceled check or online ordering receipt to demonstrate proof of the purchase. No student may pick up a book for another student.

SENIOR Pictures

The yearbook staff and the senior photographer conduct an assembly with all prospective seniors in the spring of their junior year to distribute all pertinent information concerning senior pictures. The senior photographer offers various times for individual appointments, as well as a wide variety of packages from which to choose. While we certainly encourage it, students do not have to purchase pictures or packages from the senior photographer. However, each student must pay a sitting fee for the processing and developing of the pictures. Next year, Hourglass Photo will charge $10. This price may increase from year-to-year due to rising costs involved.

The yearbook staff can guarantee that individual senior pictures will appear in the book only if each student schedules his/her appointment on time, arrives for the shoot on time, and chooses which proof to appear in the book on time. No profile shots will appear in the yearbook. Additionally, the yearbook staff and the senior photographer will define all due dates, and will include these in the information given out at the senior portrait assembly.

By having portraits taken by the same photographer under the same conditions, the yearbook staff can implement uniform quality for all photographs, thereby serving the best interest of all students.

For the 2017-2018 school year, the district will utilize the talents of Ms. Paige Duckworth for all senior portraits. Her establishment, Hourglass Photo, resides at 2 Labelle-Vue Road - Vandergrift, PA - 15690. Telephone: 724-568-3128.

SEE IT Through

Story by: A. Koontz

Confusion over arena scheduling seemed to bookend the 2016-2017 school year. Day in and day out, students and faculty alike pushed through a lengthy list of changes that arrived in heaps each day.

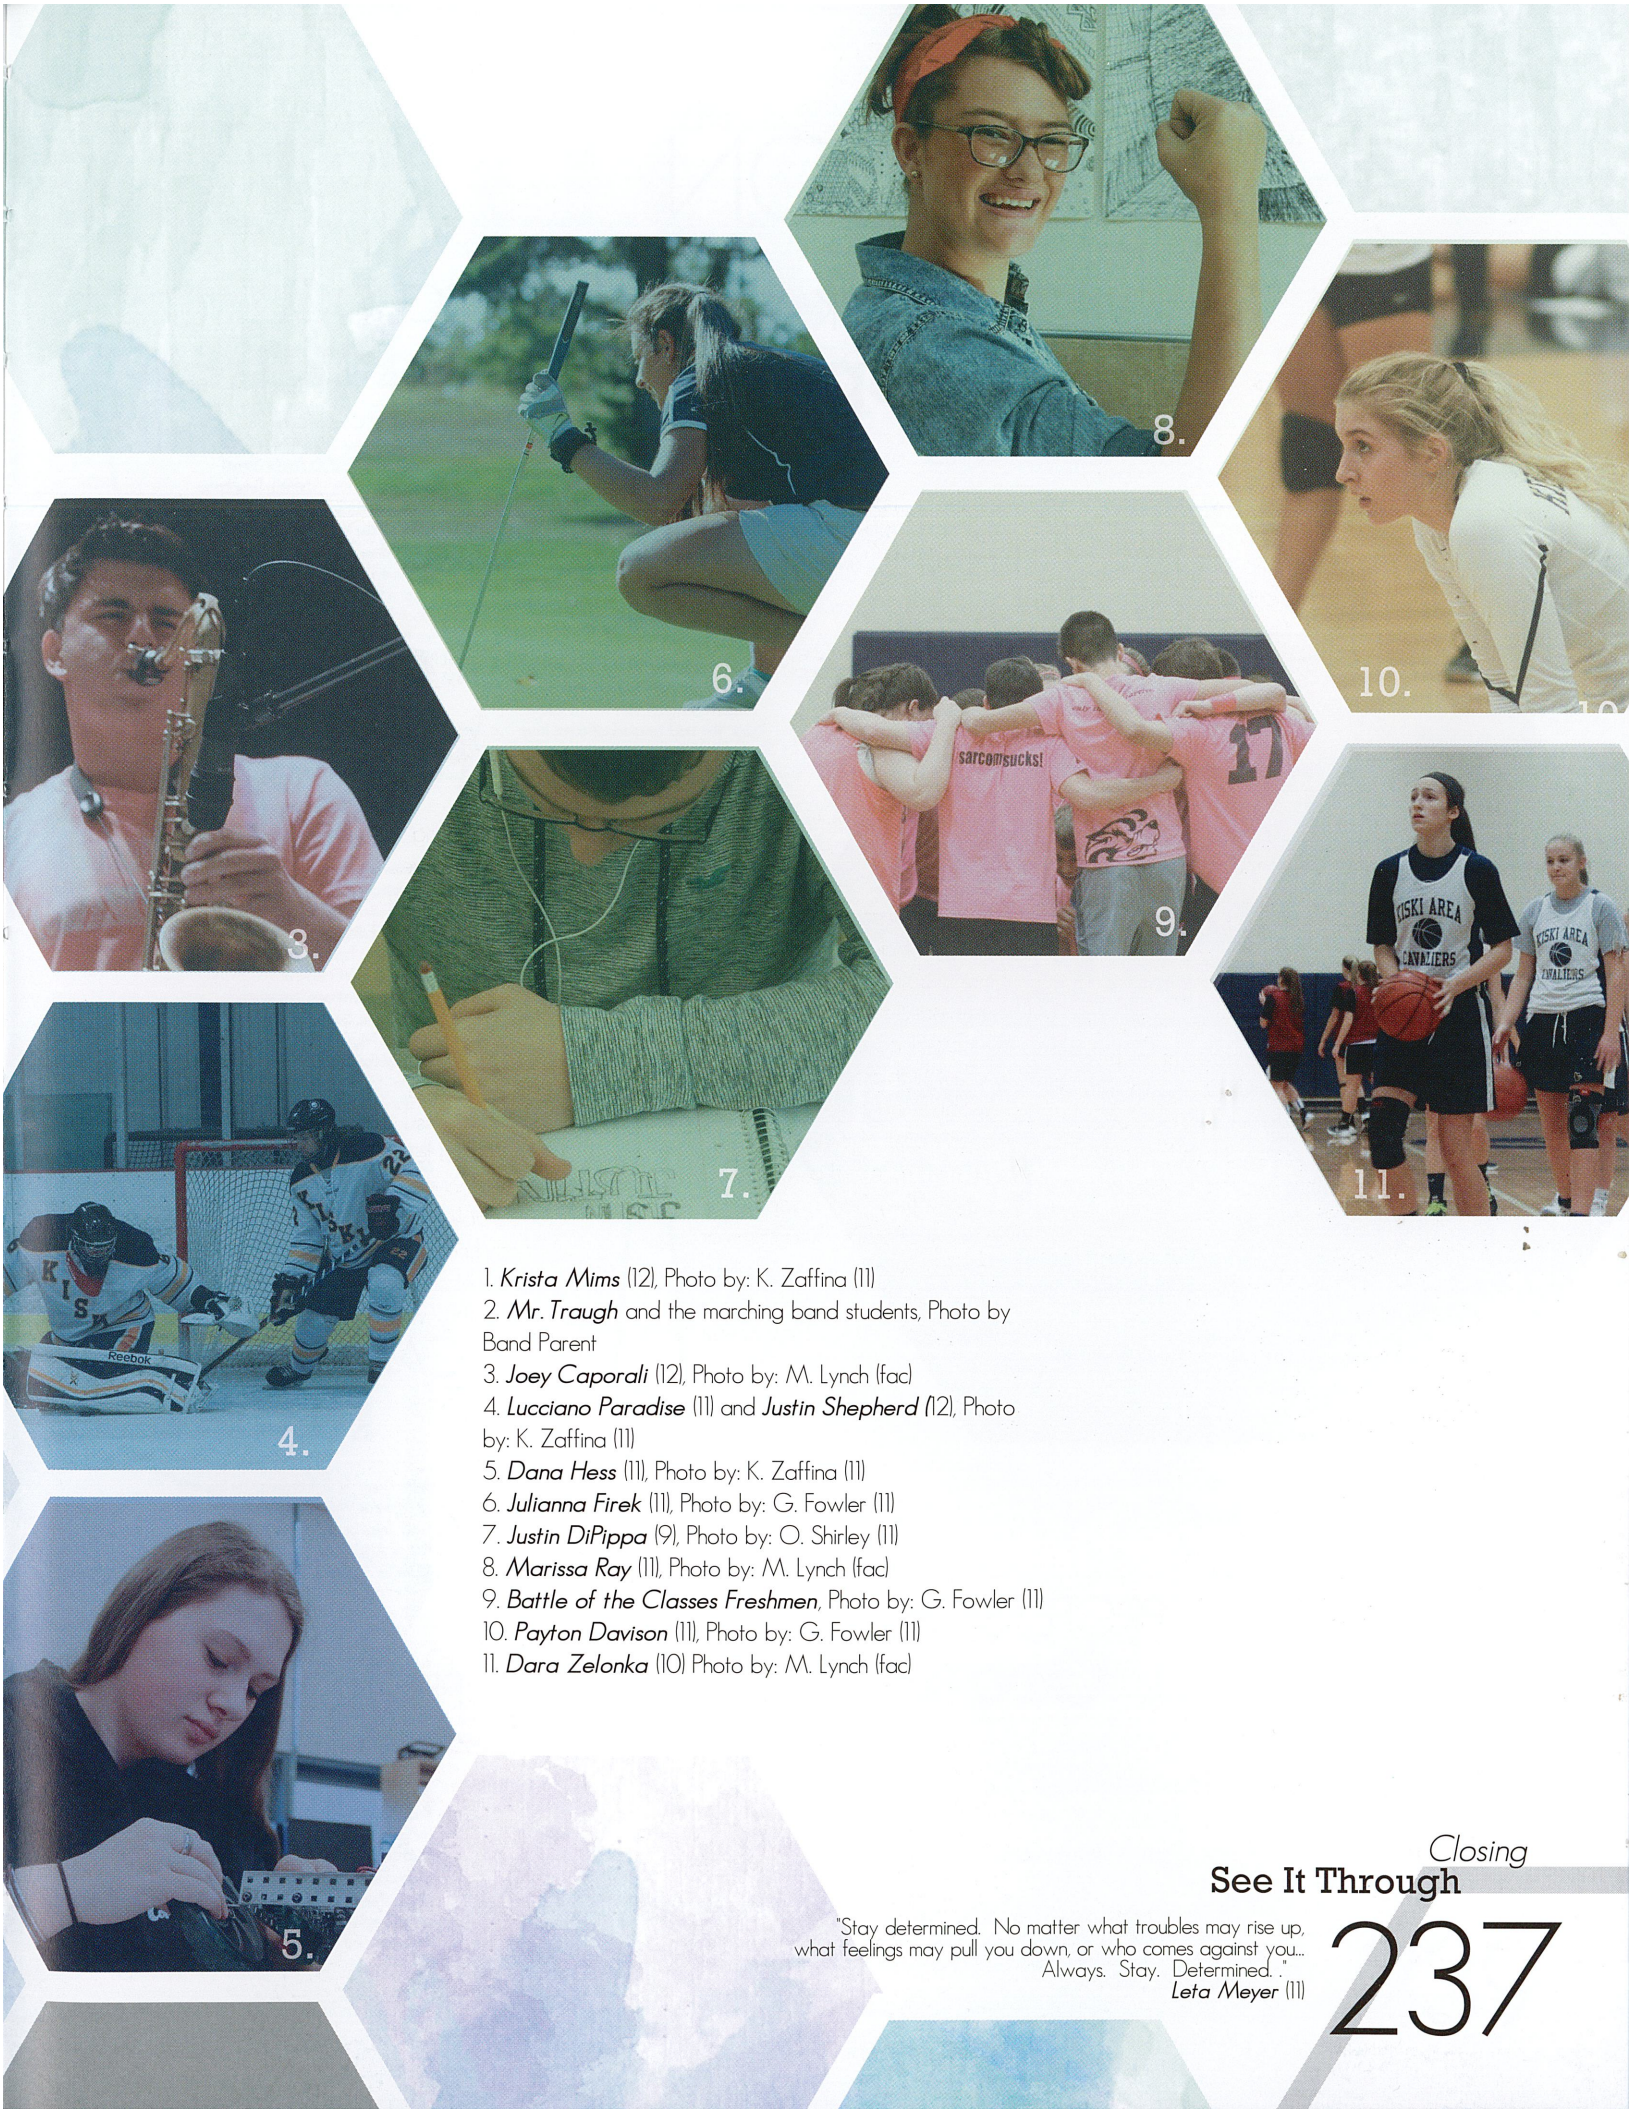

The freshman class navigated their own separate map of a bell schedule. The library turned a new page as it welcomed the new hub for chromebook distribution. The yearbook staff washed the spreads of the yearbook with watercolors alongside a new adviser. The history department changed leaders as curriculums crossed classroom borders into new territories.

Hurdles exceeded any of the past 55 years in both number and sheer difficulty level. Seniors experienced a new kind of privilege in which they could leave the building prior to 2:44. Juniors gained a new sense of adulthood as they persevered through the now longer periods of possibly the most important year of high school. Sophomores envied the ability of those easily able to access the privilege of a resource period. Freshmen realized all too late the world of chaos they had stepped into once the first day of school had commenced. Teachers wrote and rewrote lesson plans for periods that doubled in length. Administrators held their breath as they watched, taking notes as their experiment played out across 1,200 people over the course of the school year. We passed through a Kiski Area our parents and grandparents have never seen before.

We blazed all sorts of new trails, but we did not endure it all for nothing. We did it so the Cavaliers that follow us have a flawless blue and gold world to grow up and learn in. We did it because we know how to push through until the best possible outcome is achieved. Most of us still find ourselves reeling as to how we brought this year to a close, but we do know that we Saw It Through.

BOOK Specifics

This book employed a Smythe type binding with 100# dull enamel paper for all 240 pages inside. The Campus staff utilized Walsworth's Online Design Studio to create the publication. The staff utilized two font families in the book:

Rockwell Maximo

On the lithocote cover, Walsworth printed the four-color design on white bookcloth linen with a laser-cut. The staff created different front and back four-color endsheets.
